

TEMPORARY NOTICE.

THE two MSS. given in full are Bodl. Hatt. 20 and Cott. Tib. B xi, the latter from Junius's copy in the Bodleian (MS. Jun. 53). The more important variations and additions of a third MS., Cott. Otho B ii, are added in brackets, and omissions are indicated by (om.) The brackets in the Hatton text denote additions above the line, and, in some cases, restored erasures. All evidently late additions to the MS. (which are many) have been rejected from the text. Words and letters not in the MSS. are enclosed in parentheses. Italics denote expanded contractions. The two MSS., whose texts are given in full, were written during Alfred's reign, the third somewhat later. The best text is that of the older Cotton MS. The other Cotton MS., although not copied from Hatton, agrees closely with it; it has therefore been chiefly used to confirm the readings of Hatton, which differ from those of the older Cotton MS. Full details will be given in the Introduction and Notes.

Of all the unpublished Old English¹ texts, the present is perhaps the most important. Preserved in two MSS. written during Alfred's lifetime, it affords data of the highest value for fixing the grammatical peculiarities of the West-Saxon dialect of the ninth century, and, although several texts belonging to the same period have been published, the present edition is the first one of any of Alfred's works which is based on contemporary MSS.: all the editions hitherto published give but a garbled reflection of his language. The result has been that all editors, both at home and abroad, have, with one exception², persisted in ignoring the genuine West-Saxon MSS., dismissing their most constant and characteristic peculiarities as 'Mercian,' 'Northern,' 'dialectic' (whatever that may mean), 'abnormal,' or ascribing them to the innate depravity of the scribes.

It is solely with a view to prevent the student's mind from being biassed by these irrational prejudices, that I have given in the Introduction a short sketch of the characteristics of Alfredian English as distinguished from those of the later period. The illustrations are drawn chiefly from the present work, but are supported throughout by citations from other MSS. of the period, especially the Parker Chronicle. It is to be hoped that the results of these investigations will help to dissipate the wide-spread delusion that Old English has been thoroughly worked up, and that nothing remains for us but to accept blindly the theories of Rask and Grimm.

² I allude to Mr. Cockayne. a reference to the preface to the first volume of his 'Leechdoms' (p. xcii) will show that the real state of the case was rightly understood by him many years ago: his remarks do not seem, however, to have made any impression on English philologists.

From a lexicographical point of view also this work is of high importance: there is not another prose text in the language that offers so many rare words, many of which seem to occur nowhere else. Most of these words, indeed, have found their way into our dictionaries, although often in a corrupt form, or with inaccurate renderings, but others are here brought to light for the first time. Their lexicographical history is so interesting in its bearings on the past and present state of Old English philology in this country, that a brief sketch of the leading facts may not be unacceptable.

When the study of Old English was first revived by Archbishop Parker, the want of a dictionary was naturally soon felt, which want was first supplied by Somner's 'Dictionarium Saxonico-Latino-Anglicum,' Oxon., 1659, a mere glossary, without references. Meanwhile, Franciscus Junius was engaged in compiling a far more elaborate work, with copious citations from the MSS. The work was never published: it was for a long time preserved in loose sheets among the other Junius MSS. in the Bodleian, and is now bound, forming two huge volumes.

Among the MSS. used by Junius, the Pastoral, of which he possessed a transcript of his own, seems to have been indexed with especial care: but few words are omitted, and still fewer are wrongly explained.

Now it is not, perhaps, generally known that all our 'Anglo-

Saxon' dictionaries are, as far as the prose language is concerned, based almost entirely on the great work of Junius. I find that all the hápax legómena of the Pastoral cited by Lye (1772) are taken direct from Junius, his definitions being copied off word for word, occasionally with some trifling interpolation (see note to 97. 17), and without the slightest attempt at verification by reference to the MSS. The most discreditable feature of the whole proceeding is, that Lye totally ignores his obligations to Junius, and does not even mention his name. Lye, again, has been pillaged by still later dictionary-makers, also without acknowledgment or revision³. The most conclusive proofs are afforded by those words which were explained wrongly by Junius, of which gehyðnes (see note to 387. 13) is a good example. In other cases the attempt to supply gaps in the information supplied by Junius has led to equally unfortunate results. Thus Junius gives the infinitive plion correctly from 229. 20; our lexicographers are not content with copying this, but must add a weak preterite pliode, while, if they had read the Pastoral MSS. with any attention, they would have found the strong preterite pleah (37. 7), which Junius did not recognize, because his MS. (Cotton I) shows it in the slightly disguised form of pleh. Compare also the note on eftga (421. 10). Junius has also, from various causes, missed some words altogether; hence their non-appearance in our present authorities. Some of these words—bedecian (285. 12, the original of our beg), dela (405. 1), geonre (443. 25), wealg (447. 18)—are of the highest philological interest. How long they might have remained hidden, had they not been brought to light by this edition, it is hard to say.

³ Several highly amusing instances of the way in which gross errors have thus arisen, and been handed down from dictionary to dictionary, are given in Mr. Cockayne's 'Criticism on Dr. Bosworth and his Saxon Dictionary,' in his 'Shrine' (Williams and Norgate, 1864-70).

The whole history may be summed up in the words of Cynewulf:

moððe word fræt : me ðæt ðuhte wrætlicu wyrd, ða ic ðæt wundor gefrægn, ðæt se wynn forswealg wera gied sumes ðeof in ðystro, ðrymfæstne cwide and ðæs strangan staðol

The last two lines are especially appropriate :

Stælgnest ne wæs
 white ðy gleawra, ðe he ðam wordum swealg.

The main principle I have adopted in printing is to make the text as far as possible a facsimile of the original MSS., without introducing any theoretical emendations. All alteration in the text of a MS., however plausible and clever, is nothing else but a sophistication of the evidence at its fountain-head : however imperfect the information conveyed by the old scribe may be, it is still the only information we have, and, as such, ought to be made generally accessible in a reliable form. In accordance with this principle I have in all cases enclosed contemporary additions above the line in brackets, the two forms, with and without the bracketed letter, being often extremely valuable, as showing fluctuations in the pronunciation.

All evidently late additions, which are very numerous, have been rejected entirely. It is, however, possible that some of the bracketed letters may be late, as I have never rejected anything without being quite certain of its spuriousness,—a certainty which can only be obtained by long and careful study of the palæography of the MS. This point is often entirely neglected by editors, who thus introduce disturbing elements into their texts. Even Junius has in some cases quoted these late additions and alterations as genuine readings. Those few cases in which I have employed brackets to indicate restored erasures are mentioned in the notes.

In the other text (Cotton I), whose original MS. is lost, I have employed the brackets to denote the readings of Cotton II, omissions of that MS. being indicated by (om.) after the word in question. When I resolved on adopting this plan, I was under the impression that Cotton II had been entirely destroyed by fire, and consequently that the readings given by Junius in the margin of his transcript of Cotton I were all that remained. As these readings were few in number, I judged it most convenient to incorporate the more important of them into the text, so that the reader might compare the three texts at a glance. When I learnt that Cotton II was not totally destroyed, and began to examine it carefully, I repented of my plan, but it was too late to change it, as a portion of the text was already printed off.

All additions of my own in either text are enclosed in parentheses, and are intended solely to assist the beginner. From a strictly scientific point of view such additions are hardly advisable, as tending to bias the reader's judgment; but in an edition like the present, which endeavours to supply a variety of wants, they are less objectionable.

The English translation is added more from deference to the usage of the Early English Text Society than from any conviction of its utility. In fact, I look upon a translation to a text like this, which is of exclusively philological interest, as so much waste paper, utterly useless except to the merest tyro—useless even to him, if he wishes to acquire a sound knowledge of Old English, a language, which, like all others, ought either to be studied properly with grammar and dictionary, or else let alone. I should have much preferred printing the Latin original at the foot of the page, and devoting the time and space taken up by the English translation to a full critical commentary, for which, as it is, my very limited time has not sufficed. To prevent misunderstanding, I may state that the translation is made direct from the Old English, not from the Latin original. My principle throughout has been to ask myself the question, What ideas would this sentence suggest to a ninth century Englishman, unacquainted with the original? and to frame my translation accordingly. In many obscure passages, however, I have been obliged to consider what meaning the translators themselves intended to convey, and only as a last resource have I occasionally translated direct from the Latin. I have also endeavoured to translate into the received language of the present day, and have carefully avoided that heterogeneous mixture of Chaucer, Dickens, and Broad Scotch, which is affected by so many translators from the Northern languages.

The publication of the Latin text, promised on the title-page, must be postponed for an indefinite period. Critical readers will, however, have no difficulty in procuring one of the numerous texts of the work published on the continent.

The Notes are necessarily brief, and chiefly confined to remarks on erasures, interpolations, &c. Wherever a remarkable form occurs in the text I have repeated it in the Notes, to guard against the suspicion of an editorial slip. To many of the readings of Cotton I, I have added v. l.=‘varia lectio,’ signifying that Junius quotes a different reading from one of the two other MSS., thus guaranteeing, to a certain extent, at least, the accuracy of his own form.

The two Appendices need no special comment. I may, however, call the attention of Aryan philologists in general, as well as specially Teutonic scholars, to the theory of the lautverschiebung advanced in Appendix I, which I believe will be found to offer a satisfactory solution of its difficulties. The only point about which I do not feel satisfied is the distinction between wearð, worden, &c. Its causes have never yet been explained, and, until this is done, it is impossible to say whether it was developed independently in each language, or belonged to the groundspeech. The latter supposition can hardly be reconciled with the evidence of the oldest English documents, which seems to indicate a period in which medial and final ð &c. had not yet developed themselves. There can be little doubt as to the originally vocal character of the þ, f, and h, and when this is once admitted, some modification of our views on the lautverschiebung becomes absolutely necessary. Misled by false notions of symmetry, philologists have hitherto assumed that the þ was originally an aspirated t, and have thus been obliged to make historical facts fit in with unproved assumptions.

I have also added a list of errata; it is believed that such errors as may still lurk in the text are of a wholly insignificant character. I must confess that the translation stands in need of a thorough revision, which, however, I am unfortunately quite unable at present to bestow on it.

I intended originally to add the readings of the three Cambridge MSS. in a separate Appendix, but have been prevented by want of time and access to the MSS. The omission is, however, not much to be regretted. These MSS., which are of late date—two of them at least being of the eleventh century,—are of little or no value in elucidating the language of Alfred.

In conclusion, I cannot refrain from expressing a hope that this work may contribute somewhat to that reviving interest in the study of English, of which so many cheering signs begin to show themselves from various quarters. Ignorance and literary intolerance may sneer at 'Anglo-Saxon,' but all liberal minds are agreed that, even if Old English were totally destitute of intrinsic merit, it would still form a necessary link in the history of our language, and, as such, be well worthy of attention. Here, as in all branches of knowledge, it may be safely asserted that the wider the range of study, the more valuable will be its fruits: Shakespeare is elucidated by Chaucer, Chaucer, again, cannot be fully appreciated without a knowledge of the Oldest English, whence to the kindred tongues is but a short step—to the Heliand, the Edda, and the classic prose of Iceland.

INTRODUCTION.

MANUSCRIPTS.

The MSS. on which the present edition is based are these :—

1. HATTON 20 (formerly 88) in the Bodleian (H.). This MS. is a square quarto of the end of the ninth century, preserved entire with the exception of a single leaf cut out (pp. 219, 221 and 223 of this edition).

2. COTTON TIBERIUS B. xi., in the British Museum (C. i.). Originally a large quarto (in quarto grandiori W.), of the same age as H., containing only the first forty-nine out of the sixty-five chapters of the work, and having a large gap towards the end. It was injured in the great fire of 1731, restored and rebound, and burnt again in a fire at the bookbinder's, so that nothing now remains of it but a few charred fragments. It will therefore be necessary to quote Wanley's accounts of the MS., which was made while it was uninjured.

'Tiberius. B. xi. Codex membr. in quarto grandiori, in quo continentur capita pene 49 libri Gregorii Magni Papæ de Cura pastorali Saxonice versi per Ælfredum Regem. Hujus MS. fol. 3. dicitur esse liber quondam Plegmundi Archiepiscopi Cant. qui floruit anno 889. sub ipso Alfredo: Hæc autem notula, sc. ✠ Plegmunde Arcebiscepe is agifen his boc. and Swiðulfe Biscepe. & Werferðe Biscepe. quam videre est fol. i. facit quo minus id credam. Nam si antea inclytissimus Rex Plegmundo exemplar versionis suæ donaverat, quid opus illi fuerit alterius? Quin & in præfatione, lacunula cernitur alterius cujusdam nomine implenda, ÆLFRED kyning hateþ gretan—his wordum. loffice (sic) and freondlice. Quod si Ælfredus hunc ipsum Plegmundo destinarat codicem, non dubito quin jussisset ut nomen ejus in præfatione scriberetur perinde ac in Werferthi, Heastani & Wulfsigi libris. Quod autem ad scriptionem & antiquitatem hujus MS. attinet; utraque præfatio, sicut in Cod. Werferthiano ab aliena manu scripta, Codici præmittitur. Codex ipse, manu largiori, laxiori, elegantiori, & seculo Ælfrediano plane convenienti, exaratur; in usum forte cujusdam Magnatis, seu Regiæ stirpis Principis'

3. JUNIUS 53, in the Bodleian (J.). A copy of the above, made by Junius in the seventeenth century. He has added many readings from H. and the MS. described below in the margin. Those parts of the work which are wanting in C. i. he has copied from H.

4. COTTON OTHO B. ii. (C. ii.). A small folio (in fol. min. W.), apparently of the beginning of the tenth century. The MS., which was originally defective towards the end, was burnt in the Cottonian fire, but has been partially restored and rebound. About a half of the work is more or less legible in the MS. The following is Wanley's account of the MS. :—

'Otho. B. ii. Cod. memb. in fol. min. in quo continetur Liber Pastoralis Gregorii Papæ, Saxonice conversus per Ælfredum Regem.

'In Præfatione, nuncupavit Rex suum librum Hehstano Epis. Londoniensi, ad cujus Codicis fidem, hoc exemplar forte descriptum est ante Conquisitionem Angliæ. Olim fuit peculium Joannis Rogerii, qui eum, ut videtur, dono dedit Gulielmo Bowiero. Dein pervenit in manus Henrici Ellzinge, qui eum dedit, D. R. Cottono, 6. die Octobris, 1597. Olim caruit duobus foliis integris, quorum alterum manu recentioris restituitur.'

There are also three MSS. of much later date, an account of which will be found in an Appendix. These MSS. are all at Cambridge, in Corpus Christi, Trinity, and the Public Library.

That the two MSS., whose texts are given in full in this edition, were written during Alfred's reign is proved not only by the handwriting—of which I shall speak presently—but also by internal evidence, which, as far as H. is concerned, was first stated by Wanley, in his Catalogue. I therefore quote his words in full, omitting his account of the contents of the MS.

'His versibus intelligimus, (Dis ærendgewrit, &c., p. 8.) quod primus omnium Augustinus Anglorum Apostolus, Gregorii librum Pastoralem secum in Angliam adtulit: librum forsitan suæ Missioni inprimis necessarium. Quorum autem rogatu, & quo consilio, in Gregorio Saxonice vertendo, negotium adhibuit suum tantus Rex, ipse in Præfatione prima pluribus docet. Ða ic (inquit) Ða gemunde &c. Ex quibus etiam clare apparet, Pientissimum Regem & bonarum litterarum fautorem maximum, Regni sui unicuique Ecclesiæ Episcopali, exemplar unum mittere secum statuuisse. Porro, in summitate primæ pag. Epistolæ Ælfredi R. ad Werferthum Episc. Wigorn. (quæ etiam est prima pag. Codicis) exarata est quæ sequitur Inscriptio litteris Capitalibus, quæ locum memorat cui Translationis suæ exemplar unum Rex missurus erat.

✠ DEOS BOC SCEAL TO WIGORA (sic) CEASTRE.

‘Quoad scripturam hujus Cod. Lectorem monitum velim, eam id genus esse, quæ in usu apud A. Saxones erat in priscis temporibus, antequam Regnante ipso Ælfredo, vetus scribendi ratio in novam mutari cœpit. Vetus autem illa hujusce Codicis duplex est: nempe altera qua scriptæ sunt Præfationes Ælfredi Regis, quæ proxime accedunt ad manum vetustissimi Codicis Cottoniani, qui peculium Plegmundi fuisse vulgo dicitur, de quo quidem Cod infra plura: altera, qua cætera scribuntur, (unum si excipias folium, à Cod. abscissum, & Fran. Junii manu restitutum,) antiquitatis laude videtur certare cum Annalibus Anglo-Saxonicis Ecclesiæ Christi Cantuariæ, quorum potissima pars Manuscripta fuit A.D. 891. qui quidem Cod. jam nunc Bibliothecæ C.C.C.C. notatur S. ii. à me fusiùs infra describendus, cùm ordine, Codd. Saxon. illius Bibliothecæ descripturus sum. Præfationem Regii Translatoris ad Werferthum tunc temporis Episc. Wigorn. fuisse inscriptam paulo ante significavi; Addo quod unumquodque exemplar hujusce Versionis nomen illius Episcopi præ se ferebat, in cujus & Ecclesiæ usum ex Autographo descriptum fuit. Sicut enim in hoc Cod. nomen Werferthi; sic in alio Cod. Cottoniano nomen Hehstani Episcopi; in Cod. Cantabrigiensi nomen Wulfsigi Episcopi legimus. Denique, quia docet Inscriptio, hunc Cod. fuisse destinatum Ecclesiæ Wigorniensi, ex eo constat illum non adhuc ad Ecclesiam missum fuisse. Hæc de nobilissimo hoc Cod. qui ante octingentos annos Ælfredo Rege jubente scriptus erat. Utrum vero apud exterarum gentes, Regia id genus monumenta, in patria lingua conscripta, extent, dum docti ubique silent, me id nescire fateor.’

Alfred says in his preface that he intends to send a copy of the work to all the bishops in his kingdom—‘to ælcum biscepstole on minum rice wille ane onsendan’—and accordingly he begins his preface with the words ‘Ælfred cyning hateð gretan . . . biscep,’ a different name being inserted in each copy. This affords, of course, no means of distinguishing between the actual MS. that was sent to the bishop and a later copy, as the scribe would naturally retain the name. But in the Hatton, and in no other, MS. these words are written on the first page ‘DEOS BOC SCEAL TO WIOGORA CEASTRE,’ implying that at the time when this was added—that is, after the completion of the MS—the book had not been sent to Worcester, the see of bishop Wærferð.

Still stronger is the evidence for C. i. In this MS. the blank after ‘hateð gretan’ is not filled up at all, nor is there anything to show for whom the book was intended. There is however on the first leaf this memorandum :—‘Plegmunde arcebiscepe is agifen his boc ond Swiðulf biscepe ond Werferðe biscepe.’ This fact points to two important conclusions, (1) that the MS. was not sent to any one, (2) that it was written before the copies destined for Plegmund, Swiðulf and Wærferð. So far, then, we are lead to the conclusion that in C. i. we have the original, or one of the original, drafts of the work from which Wærferð’s MS. was copied. As each copy was completed, compared with the original, and sent off, a memorandum was made in the latter. This conclusion is, however, only partially supported by a comparison of the various readings of the two MSS. themselves : although the correct reading is generally that of C. i., yet in many cases H. has the advantage. The probability is that H. was re-read with some other MS., which MS. must in some cases have been a better authority than C. i. When the number of copies that would be required is considered, it seems probable that several of them would be made simultaneously, and hence that several originals would be required, which would, of course, themselves be careful copies of the corrected first draft of the work. These considerations modify our first conclusion :—C. i. is not the original draft of the work ; it only represents it more closely than any other existing MS. Another explanation of the partial superiority of H.’s readings is possible—that H. was revised by a fresh comparison with the Latin original. It seems however improbable, when we consider how laborious such a task must have been in those illiterate times.

From a purely philological point of view—and the interest of the work is mainly philological—these questions are of little importance : it is enough to know that in these two MSS. we have genuine and accurate specimens of Alfred's language, written during his reign. This is proved not only by the evidence stated above, but also by the character of the handwriting, which, as Wanley remarks, agrees closely with that of the first part of the Parker MS. of the Chronicle, which stops at the year 891. It would be impossible to treat the question of handwriting fully without facsimiles and a regular treatise on palæography, but a few remarks on the chief peculiarities of the writing of Alfred's time may be useful. Its general characteristics are freedom, lightness, and elegance. There is, generally, a tendency to slope the letters a little, and to join and interlace them together as much as possible. After Alfred's time the handwriting begins to lose its artistic character : it becomes thick and heavy, has a laboured look, and, in fact, approximates gradually to that ne plus ultra of barbarism, the black letter. There are also differences in the formation of individual letters. In ninth-century MSS. the l often projects below the line, and ends in a free semicircular sweep. The p is always open, the second stroke ending with a point. The r has four shapes : the first is that of our capital R, only small ; the second is the same with the leg lengthened ; the third that of the ordinary 'Anglo-Saxon' types ; the fourth is the same with the leg shortened. It is important to observe that the second stroke of all these r's is always turned up at the end, which alone distinguishes the fourth shape of the letter from the n. The y always slopes, and is never dotted ; there is besides another shape of the y which is that of the Greek digamma, except that it always descends below the line, like the ordinary y. There are besides some isolated palæographic archaisms to be found in H. : the α sometimes resembles oc joined together, and æ is written separately æ in the word hæfð (277.6), and a peculiar form of the t, resembling the capital T, appears once at the end of a word. The use of k for c in kýning, koka, kolk, &c., and of u for w may also be regarded as archaisms. u for w is limited to those cases in which w is preceded by another consonant, as in cwæð, hwæt, swæ, swugode (151.22), swuncon (239.21). In the Chronicle uu is occasionally written initially for w, as in uuntra, uuceron, and in some of the oldest MSS. uu or u is used exclusively.

These remarks apply chiefly to H.; the fragments of C. i. that remain are too scanty to allow us to judge of the details of the handwriting, but its general character is entirely Alfredian. (Compare the remarks of Wanley, quoted above, p. xiii.)

The variety of the handwritings of H. is remarkable: Alfred's preface is written in one hand, the piece of verse in another, and the handwriting changes again with the table of contents, and so on through the whole MS.

Many Latin glosses are inserted between the lines in the earlier part of the MS.: the work seems to have been used as a text-book for the study of Old English in the thirteenth and following centuries.

The MS was evidently written with great care: it is full of the most minute corrections, often consisting in purely orthographical modifications, a single letter being added above the line.

The character of the second Cottonian MS. (Otho B. ii.) is somewhat peculiar. It is certainly later than Alfred's time: its handwriting points to the early part of the tenth century. The first half of the MS. is evidently a careful copy from a MS. of Alfred's time, preserving not only the words but also the forms with considerable accuracy. Towards the middle, however, the scribe becomes careless, frequent omissions and inaccuracies creep in, and increase to such a degree as to make the MS. almost unintelligible at parts. The language also undergoes a marked change: the genuine forms of Alfred's time are supplanted by others quite foreign to the two older MSS., although it is not easy in all cases to determine whether they are genuine or merely due to scribal carelessness.

The original of C. ii. was sent to Bishop Hehstan (see Wanley's account p. xiv, above): C. ii. itself was not therefore copied directly from either H. or C. i. What the relation of Hehstan's MS. itself was to H. and C. i. cannot be ascertained with certainty. The non-mention of Hehstan in the memorandum in C. i. makes it probable that the two MSS. had nothing special in common. This is confirmed by the readings of C. ii. itself, which in most cases agree closely with those of H., yet with exceptions enough to show that C. ii. or its original were not copied directly from H. These readings of C. ii. which differ from those of H. always agree with C. i., except in a few cases of manifest corruption of the text.

The only point of interest about J. is the accuracy of the copy. This question is easily settled by a comparison of those parts of the MS. which were copied from H., and the result is very satisfactory: the words and letters of the original are given with great accuracy, and without any 'critical' emendations. Junius has, however, swerved from the path of literal accuracy in a few unimportant particulars: he neglects the accents of his original, changes u in such words as hucet into w, and ŷ into p, especially in the word ŷe, which he nearly always writes pē. He also expands contractions, writing ŷonne and and for ŷon̄ and ȝ. These facts are confirmed by the fragments of C. i. itself: they show on several times, while Junius omits the accent each time, and ŷe, ŷæt, sucæ against the pē, pæt, swæ of J. Otherwise the fragments—as far as they can be decyphered—agree with J.

Many of the rarer forms in J. are indirectly confirmed by the reading of the other two MSS. given in the margin. Thus the form agne (140. 20) for agnes, which we should otherwise be inclined to regard as a mere slip of Junius's, is made certain by the mention of the agnes of the two other MSS. This evidence is of especial value in cases of omission.

THE GRAMMATICAL CHARACTERISTICS OF ALFRED'S ENGLISH.

A curious feature in the history of Old English philology is the neglect of the older documents of the language: not only are the forms that appear in our grammars and dictionaries West-Saxon, to the almost entire exclusion of the equally important Anglian and Kentish dialects—they are to an equal extent, late, as opposed to early West-Saxon. The cause must be sought in the early history of the study of Old English in this country. When the antiquaries first began to collect, copy, and print Old English MSS., they could not fail to distinguish roughly between two classes of MSS., the one consisting of a few MSS. written in a free, almost cursive hand, often partly illegible from age and difficult to read, while the MSS. belonging to the other class were numerous, well preserved, and as easy to read as a printed book. The result was, that they turned their attention exclusively to the later MSS., and gradually came to regard the older ones as abnormal or dialectic variations from the regular language preserved in the later works. These unreasoning traditions have been preserved up to the present day, and the result is, that not a single one of Alfred's works has been printed from contemporary MSS., but from copies of the tenth, eleventh, and even the twelfth centuries, which give only an imperfect idea of the language of Alfred's time; for, although they follow the words of Alfred with more or less accuracy, they alter the orthography to suit that of their own period, so that the characteristically Alfredian forms appear only sporadically, and are consequently regarded as scribal errors by editors. An unfortunate result of the partial retention of the original forms is, that these MSS., while giving but a garbled representation of the language of Alfred, can as little be taken as faithful guides to that of their own period. When it is considered that the majority of existing Old English MSS. are of this kind, the chronological confusion in our grammars and dictionaries needs no comment. The only sound basis of comparison would evidently be MSS. of the ninth century on the one hand, and contemporary MSS. of writings of the beginning of the eleventh century on the other. When these two extremes have been compared and their distinctive peculiarities determined, it would be possible to trace the gradual change of the intermediate tenth century. To carry out this scheme with any completeness, is, in the present state of Old English editing, an impossibility; it would, in fact, amount to writing a dictionary of the prose language—a work whose foundations have yet to be laid. I have mentioned the want of proper editions of Alfred's works; we are hardly better off with regard to the eleventh century. Of the two chief prose writers of this period, Elfric and Wulfstan, the latter has not been edited at all, while all that has been published of the voluminous works of Elfric consists of a slovenly copy of a single MS. of a part of his Homilies.

The only works of Alfred which are preserved in contemporary MSS. are the Pastoral and Orosius. Of the Orosius there are two MSS., one of Alfred's reign, which is unfortunately defective, the other of the eleventh century. This latter (the Cotton), although one of the worst Old English MSS. that exists, has been twice printed entire, while the older one was ignored by the one editor, and only used by the other to fill up the constant omissions and correct the gross errors of the later MS. The most curious fact is, that the editor himself has proved decisively that the later MS. is a direct copy of the earlier one! There are besides several other MSS. of Alfred's reign, which, although not containing any of his known works, are of equal philological importance. These are the Parker MS. of the Chronicle¹, a few leaves of a Martyrology, printed by Mr. Cockayne in his 'Shrine,' and a charter of uncertain date, placed by Kemble 871-889, which seems to be the oldest document which can, with any certainty, be claimed as West-Saxon.

PHONOLOGY.

a. In late W.S. original a appears as ea before consonant combinations beginning with l, r, h, while in early W.S. the simple vowel is often preserved. This is especially the case before l-combinations: while the forms heard, bearn, wearð, eahtian, &c., are in early, as well as late W.S. almost exclusively in use, the unmodified a in onwald, salde, allum, &c., is almost as frequent as the ea in all MSS. of Alfred's time. An almost solitary instance of the retention of a before an r-combination in the Pastoral occurs p. 180.11 where C. has art, and H. the usual eart. In one place (48.21) C. ii. has harm, with the e added above the line, showing that Hehstan's copy had the more archaic form. The Charter also has onwardum and towardan. Original a also occurs sporadically before other consonants; thus p. 95. 4 we find apla twice in both MSS., but in the next line æppel and 69.1 æpplas. Other examples are—fagenian (60.17), atiewe (85.16), nas (108.10), watrode (293.4). These forms are however occasionally found in much later MSS., especially in the case of apla.

ea itself also occurs archaically in some forms of the verb mæg, which in the later language have an i; thus in the Pastoral we find meahte, Ʒu meaht constantly, alternating occasionally with mæhte (6.24) and mehte (113.14), which latter also occurs 164.14 as the reading of C. ii. In the Charter the very archaic almahtig occurs as well as almæhtig. It is remarkable that while the late mihte &c. hardly ever occur in the Pastoral, the form niht is fully established.

The labialization of a before nasals which appears in every stage and dialect of O.E. is so strongly developed in early W.S. as in many words almost to exclude the original sound and constitute a special characteristic of the period. Such forms as monig, monn, ond, long occur in every line of the Pastoral and Orosius, while in Elfric and Wulfstan the original manig, mann, and, lang reappear. The labialization is however retained in a few words throughout the O.E. period, and, in one case, up to the present day. These words are the prep. on, the conj. Ʒonne, and the acc. masc. sing. of the def. art. Ʒone. This is, no doubt, owing to the very frequent occurrence of these words, and is paralleled by the exceptional retention of the original vocal pronunciation of such words as this, that, &c. The change is, however, by no means universal in early W.S.: such forms as mann, manig, land occur now and then in the best MSS., while in some words the a is almost exclusively used. The general rule seems to be that the commonest words have o, the rarer a. Thus in all MSS. of Alfred's time the form ond occurs exclusively, never and. There are many apparent exceptions in Junius's copy of C., where the form and occurs constantly; but I believe they are merely inaccurate expansions of the contraction. In the same way monn, monig are much more frequent than mann, manig, while a rarer word, such as panne, ramm (see the passages in Cap. XXI.), is almost always written with a.

Archaic uses of a in inflections are treowleasana (260.9) flæsc- licana, with which compare welona (465.16), earða (36.5) dat. sing., anra (167.2) for anre, manoda (168.16). For the archaic fem. plur. nom. of adjectives see p. xxxvi, below. Inflectional a occasionally appears in the weakened form æ. eallæ several times in Alfred's preface, gefyldæ (5.10), gæsðæs (291.9) gen. sing.

A vexed question in Old English phonology is that first started by Grimm, whether there was any distinction between the two kinds of e's—the a-umlaut and the i-umlaut? Grimm, arguing from the analogy of the undeniable High German distinction, at first answered the question in the affirmative, but afterwards changed his opinion (Deutsche Grammatik, i. 333, 3te ausg.). Later German philologists also deny the distinction. A careful study of the Pastoral MSS. has, however, convinced me that Grimm's original view is correct. In all the three oldest MSS. the e which arose from a is often expressed by æ, while the e from i is written simply e. These æ's are sparingly employed in H., more frequently in C., and occur so frequently in C. ii. as to constitute a special feature of this MS. They are found in H. and C. chiefly in the verb secan, thus sægð (225.23) in all three MSS., sæcgean (212.9) in C. and C. ii., while H. has secan. The word eðceodig also appears frequently in the two oldest MSS. with æ. Other examples are bældo (40.17), ængel (69.10). In the Charter we find ærfeweardum, and in the Martyrology unasæcgendlicum and sægð. This point is so important that I have, as far as the dilapidated state of the MS. allows, collected all the words in C. ii. which show this æ, and given an exhaustive list of them in an Appendix among the other peculiar forms of C. ii. This æ occurs here and there in later MSS. as well, but is either ignored by editors or considered as an abnormal change of e into the regular æ of dæg, &c. The cause of the disuse of this æ is not difficult to see: it was the ambiguity of the combination, which led to constant confusion with the short æ of dæg on the one hand and the long of læran on the other. Grimm's main objection to the assumption of two e's was that in the regular æ of dæg an intermediate vowel between a and e already existed; but if we assume for the æ of dæg the sound in 'man' (Mr. Ellis's æ) and for the umlaut of a that of the English short e in 'men' (E), the sound (e) still remains for the umlaut of i.

These distinctions, although delicate, are quite conceivable, and are strongly supported by the analogy of Icelandic. (See Þóroddr's account in the Skálda, and Mr. Vigfússon's interesting remarks in the Icelandic Dictionary, p. 113.)

This e also occurs archaically, though rarely, in the place of ea = a: scel (125.4), hefweicne (125.8), andwerdan (133.18), middangerdes (60.8) in C. ii. Similar forms occur in the Chronicle: cester, huerf, agef; and in the Charter we find hrofescestre. These forms are interesting in connection with Koch's ingenious theory of the origin of the ea = *a*¹; but the fact that ea = au undergoes a similar change is against it.

i. The change of i into e is not uncommon in derivative syllables, especially in -lec and -eg for -lic and -ig; thus such forms as hirdelican and hirdlecan, hefigum and hefegum alternate on almost every page of the Pastoral. The forms in -lec are especially important, as showing that the vowel was already shortened in the time of Alfred, which is further confirmed by the fact that derivative adjectives ending in -lic or -lec take the full termination -u in the fem. sing. and neut. plur. nom. (p. xxxvi, below), thus nytwyrdlicu ðing (255.12); while the radical gelic preserves the original quantity, as is proved by the absence of the inflectional -u in ungelic spræc (49.9) and similar instances. The same change occurs also before ng in derivative syllables, as in niedenga, gemetengum, obliging us to modify Grimm's rule that i is always preserved intact before nasals. These forms are found also in the other early W. S. MSS.; thus the Chronicle has denescan, wicenga, and even the later Dialogues of Gregory show such forms as halegan, cwðlecestan, holenga. This change also appears in the form brengean for bringan, which is very common in the Pastoral and the Chronicle, unless we assume the e in this case to be the a-umlaut; as it certainly is in the Old Saxon brengian. It seems, however, most probable that bringan and brengean differed originally as strong and weak, the former having as preterite brang, the latter brohte.

The early W. S. use of i, e and eo (io) is different from the late in many words. Thus in the Pastoral the form hefon, hefonlic occurs invariably, to the total exclusion of heofon, heofonlic, &c., the regular forms in Elfric and other late writers. eo also appears in many words where later writers employ i exclusively: Ʒeosum, cnioht, cleopian in the Pastoral; gewreotu, weotum, ageofen in the Charter.

The use of io for eo is common in early W. S., and appears but rarely in MSS. of the late W. S. period. Examples offer themselves on every page of the Pastoral.

ea = eo. Of the ea for eo, which is so frequent in Kentish and Anglian, there are but scanty traces in early W. S. The only example in the two oldest MSS. of the Pastoral seems to be tweagea (86.13) for tweogea = twega. The Chronicle has feala (14.31), the Martyrology scealden and sceolden, and the Charter earƷe. The comparison of the Icelandic hiarta (or, as Þóroddr would write it, hearta), and the fact that the form hearte occurs only in the oldest English documents, and is gradually supplanted by heorte, makes it probable that the ea is the older of the two diphthongs. In eart for eort the excessive frequency of the word has preserved the older form intact throughout all dialects and periods of O. E. In Kentish and Anglian the constant fluctuation between eo and ea has led to an analogous change of eō into eā, although here there can be no question about the spuriousness of the unlabial diphthong. Of this change there seems to be an example in the reading Ʒeawas (196.23) of C. for the correct Ʒeowas of H. The second Cottonian MS shows the converse change in unƷeowas for unƷeawas, geƷreatod (182.14) for geƷreatod. The same MS. also changes ea = a into eo: eorce (170.11), beorn (190.1), and in several other instances.

u. There are traces of a substitution of o for u in root- as well as derivative syllables exactly parallel to those discussed under i. Examples are:—folneah (35.20), ƷorhtioƷ (423.4), tielungum (133.4). u is also extensively employed in inflections, where the later language has o. Examples are:—hlafurd, heafud, rumgiful, swiƷur, wisƷust, saldun, grapude, Ʒrowude, seldun, all from the Pastoral. Similar forms occur in the Chronicle: abbud, weorƷuste, wærun, todældun, prowude. It will be seen that this u represents a great variety of older vowels. In strong preterites, such as saldun, it may be a genuine archaism, but in most cases it is evidently a mere neutral vowel, in u occasionally changes into y in a very peculiar and inexplicable manner. Thus, from the adjectives mettrum and untrum the derivatives mettrymnes and untrymnes occur very frequently, as well as the normal mettrumnes and untrumnes, the two MSS. often showing each a different form in the same passage. These forms may be explained by supposing that the original i of the -nes produced umlaut in the root syllable, which is certainly the explanation of a similar occurrence of y for u in a few subjunctive preterites (p. xxxv, below). This theory will not however explain ofercymenne (229.20) for ofercumenne. This form is no scribal error, for it is supported by the imperative cym of the Martyrology and the sealwyda of the Chronicle (80.9). Here there is no possibility of umlaut: we can only assume a direct change from guttural to palatal, as in the regular weakening of a into æ, without any external influence.

y. The different usages with respect to this letter in early and late W. S. form one of the most distinguishing features of the two periods. In the later period y and i are written in many cases almost at random, and y is very generally substituted for ē = au, while in early W. S. y is, as a general rule, strictly limited to its original use—to express the i-umlaut of u: such spellings as hym, syndon, crypð, gehyran, cining, never appear in Alfredian MSS., except as isolated irregularities. There is one case, however, in which y for i begins to appear even in the best early W. S. MSS.: when i comes before consonant-combinations beginning with r, it is frequently written y. Thus in the Pastoral MSS. we find towyrpð, wyrðest, wyrst, byrhto. although the older unlabialized forms still hold the upper hand, especially in H., which in this particular is more archaic than C. There are besides isolated instances of y for i before other consonants, such as šysum, cwyde, nyðemestan, which are again more frequent in C. than in H. In some words, however, the y for i seems to have fixed itself permanently. This is especially the case with the adjective riht, which throughout both Pastoral MSS. is, as far as I have observed, always written with a y, both singly and in composition. A perhaps solitary exception seems to occur 64.11, where the Junius MS. has unrihtwisan; this may, however, be an error of Junius's. In the same way the preterite of don is everywhere in the Pastoral MSS. written dyde, dydon, &c. The Chronicle also writes ryht, geryhtan, gedyde, &c. The Martyrology, however, has dede, instead of dyde, and the same form occurs twice in the Pastoral MS. C. ii.: dede (192.15) and dedon (206.20). This dede is probably the oldest form of the word: compare Old Saxon deda and Old High German teta.

Observe the delicate distinction between wile, wiste, and nyle, nyste, which is observed almost without exception in the Pastoral MSS.; the labialized vowel of the contractions of ne-wile, ne-wiste is evidently due to the absorption of the w.

It is curious to observe how early this confusion between i and y begins in West-Saxon. even the MS. of the Dialogues of Gregory, which retains many genuine Alfredian forms, lost in other MSS. of the same character, is full of such barbarisms as hys, bysene, me þinceð, brice (for bryce), &c.

How far the confusion is founded on an actual change in pronunciation, or is only orthographical, is a doubtful question. In many MSS. I believe it is almost entirely a matter of spelling, the y being preferred because of its greater distinctness, being less liable to be confounded with parts of other letters than the i. This is confirmed by the fact that y is much oftener written for i than i is for y, which would hardly be the case if i and y had absolutely the same pronunciation. It is also worthy of remark that the confusion is generally confined to the short i and y: such forms as wyff for wif, &c., are not frequent in the generality of MSS. It is well known to all phoneticians that short French u is much more liable to be confounded with short i than the long sound is with long i; and it seems probable that this is the explanation of the Old English confusion. Some careless or obtuse-eared scribe may have begun to write hym for him, &c., and the change may have been generally adopted from purely orthographic and practical reasons.

For the rare change of y into e, see note on embe (20.22)

ā. In some words ā becomes æ in early W.S., while the a reappears in the later language. The commonest example is swæ for swa, which occurs throughout C., and appears here and there in H. It is interesting to observe that the e of the original swæ has been carefully erased in the Hatton text of Alfred's preface, showing that the æ was getting antiquated (see note to Alfred's preface). Other examples are gæst, ƿæm (dat. sing. and plur.), ægen (4.13, 63.11), twæm, bæm, hwæm, læcnigende (61.3), twiðcræwen and geðcræwene (87.18, 22), sæwan (427.18). The same forms appear in the other W. S. MSS. of the period: tuæm in the Chronicle, suæ alternating with sua in the Martyrology. In late W. S. all these words would be written with a, except perhaps ƿæm for ƿam now and then. ænne and nænne, however, for anne and nanne, are common enough in the MSS. of Elfric; more so indeed than in Alfredian MSS., where they rarely occur.

ē. This vowel occasionally appears as a contracted eā in such words as ƿeh (103.15), togenes (89.18), helicuste (131.19), smegeanne (152.13). In H. the a is often added above the line as in ela (49.7), henesse (99.2), ƿewa (125.2). Similar forms occur in the Chronicle: ongen (80.9), ƿeh (90.4), ger (93.32); and in the Charter we find ec, ger. In gecnewon (28.1) and oncnew (295.8) e exceptionally represents eō.

œ. A few cases in which the i-umlaut of ō still appears in a labialized form deserve special attention. œ instead of the usual e appears in three words in the Pastoral—œðel (2.7), = Old-Saxon ōðil, oel from Latin oleum (see note on 368.11), and doe (8.2), subj. of dōn. This doe also occurs in the Martyrology, and is the only example of œ for ē in that document. The Chronicle has only the proper name coenbryht (34.12). In the Charter there are several examples, mostly written eo: gefeorum, meodrencynn and feo (subj. of fōn) several times, once written foe, as in the doe of the Pastoral. This eo for œ is found in several of the older MSS.: the O. E. inscription in the Codex Aureus at Stockholm has ƿas halgam beoc twice. It is interesting, both as proving the non-diphthongic character of the sound—the e being evidently a mere diacritic, and therefore liable to be transposed without affecting the significance of the digraph—and because it removes all doubt as to the form doe, in which the e might otherwise be regarded as inflectional.

eo. This diphthong is frequently written io in such words as lioht, bebode. The use of this iō is exactly parallel to that of the io for eo in cnioht (p. xxv, above).^s

For the occasional change of eō into eā see under eo above.

ie. On account of the importance of this diphthong and the complexity of its origin, I have reserved its consideration to the last place among the vowels. This ie seems to be confined entirely to the W. S. dialect: I cannot find a trace of it in the Old Kentish and Anglian dialects. Even in early W. S. its range is limited and its distribution varied: the Charter affords not a single example of it, and the Martyrology only one (afierr). It is of frequent occurrence both in the Orosius and the Chronicle, and is especially frequent in the Pastoral MSS. Judging from its scarcity in the Charter and Martyrology, which are the most antiquated W. S. MSS. we possess, the ie seems to have developed itself during the latter half of the ninth century, and to have reached its highest point of development towards the end of the century, to which period the three MSS. in which it is most fully represented belong. It arises from the following vowels:—

- (1) i—sicæte, liecgað, cnieht, begietan, hieder, gefrieðode, bieseniað, giefa, hiera, ierre, tieligeað, wielle, hiene, siendon, ðienga, niewan.
- (2) e (from a) before consonant-combinations beginning with l and r—ieldran, gehieft, hielfe (handle); amierred, awiergdum, ahwierfað, ierminga; rarely before n-combinations—ge-sciendan.
- (3) ī—hwie, wietan (blame), wiese, unðriestan, adriefð, sien.
- (4) ē (from au)—geiecen, ciegeð, diegla, bietles, niedenga, ieðnesse, gehieran, gieman, gehiened.
- (5) eō, and more rarely eā; probably in both cases through an intermediate ē—onlieht (illuminates), bebiet, (commands), ætðiedig, ðiestrum, gestiere, friend; hliepen (214.7), hiewð (hews).

There are besides some isolated cases which cannot be brought under the above heads. In scieran (139.12) we have a solitary instance of ie arising from e = i. In ciele (285.5, and foll.) an equally anomalous exception to the rule that ē only becomes ie when it corresponds to original au.

In all the above cases ie is liable to undergo a further change into simple i, or rather, in the case of i and ī, a return to the original sound. No rule can be given: ie and i seem to occur in pretty equal proportions, although, perhaps, the i's preponderate in C, the ie's in H. Where these sounds arise from e, either short or long, the original e frequently appears, so that many words have three forms: gescendan, gesciendan, gescindan; geheran, gehieran, gehiran, &c. The original forms are, however, much rarer in most cases than the modifications, and it is only in exceptionally antiquated passages that they occur in any frequency. Thus in the Charter and Martyrology they are still in the majority, in the Hatton MS. of the Pastoral they occur chiefly towards the end of the MS., which is on the whole more archaic than the earlier part. We see now that these changes are the key to the late W. S. forms with y, such as yldra, yrming, gehyran, bebyt, gestyran, &c, which figure almost exclusively in the later MSS., whence they have passed into our grammars, dictionaries, and 'critical' texts, to the exclusion of the genuine old forms discussed above: these y's are labialized i's which arose from an older ie. Physiologically it seems simplest to regard the change of e into ie as due to simple palatal diphthongization by prefixing an i-glide, the original sound of the unmodified vowel being preserved in all cases; thus iēldra would have the sound (iē) and gehieran that of (iēe), as in the Icelandic mér (mīēr), which was certainly originally (meēr).

CONSONANTS.

c, g. The palatalization of these letters, indicated by the introduction of an e, which also occurs in the later language, is carried to a great extent in early W. S., although the unmodified consonants are frequent enough, so that there is a constant fluctuation between such forms as geðencean and geðencan, bregean and bregan, &c. In some cases an i appears instead of the e: olecciuṅga, worldvolencium, and especially in ecium. It is possible, however, that the i in the last two words may be really a remnant of the final -i of the stem

The later change of the final g into h is only beginning in early W. S.: such forms as slog, burg, still maintain their ascendancy over the sloh and burh of Elfric and other writers of the period. The spelling bogh (81.19) is interesting, as showing that the final h was probably vocal at this time, that is, where it arose from an earlier g. In ah for ac (305.1) we have the only example I can find in the Pastoral of the change of final c into h. This ah also occurs in the Martyrology. In the Northumbrian Gospels ih for ic, &c., is common enough.

The frequent omission of initial h is a remarkable feature of the Pastoral MSS.: æfdon (27.25, 153.18, &c.), is (43.17), ringas in C. ii. (168.24). Often the h is added above the line, as in ealden (63.14). The addition of an inorganic h is rarer: his for is (215.19), compare ahēbbad in the Chronicle (95.33). The omission of the medial and final g and h is also common, but the missing letter is generally added by the corrector: awierdan (249.15 several times), oferhyde (110.22); ƿur (63.9 and often), ƿurteon (73.6), ƿur in C. ii. (258.23), fort (33.5), fulbeortum (87.23), dryten (101.23).

t, d, ƿ. For a full discussion of the difficult question of the pronunciation and origin of the ƿ the reader is referred to Appendix I. Here I will only state that the general result of my investigations is that the sound—whether represented by ƿ, þ, or th—was in Alfred's time vocal (dh) in all positions, and that at a still earlier period this (dh) occurred only initially, being represented medially and finally by the (d) from which it arose. In the same Appendix will also be found an account of the peculiar sƿ. For the loss of d after l see under n.

There are many cases in the Pastoral of that change of d—generally final, but often also medial—into t which appears in isolated words throughout the O. E. period. In one word the change appears fixed in Alfred's time, although the original form re-appears later on. This word is sint, contrasting with sindon. Other examples are færelt alternating with færeld (36.22, 49.4), the proper name dauit, also appearing as dauid and dauif (169.17, 199.4, 93.13), gesuntfulnessum (34.5).

Various assimilations between ƿ and t also deserve notice. A familiar instance, not peculiar to Alfredian English, is ƿætte for ƿæt

æe. This is the only instance of the kind in the Pastoral, with the exception of æt ta for æt æa in C. ii. (200.16). In the Chronicle we find æt tæt for æt ææt (50.22). In many Middle E. works this assimilation of t at the end of one word and þ at the beginning of another is carried out with great regularity, for example in Orrm, in O. E. it is only sporadically indicated. The same assimilation sometimes takes place with the t = d mentioned above, as in mittiæe for mit æy æe = mid æy æe, a form which occurs in the Dialogues of Gregory and in some old MSS. of uncertain dialect. Lastly in witteah (255.23) for wiðteah we have an instance of the assimilation of final ð and initial t.

b, f For the archaic use of b for f in næbre, &c., see Appendix I.

r. The tendency to drop this letter, especially in the word for is strongly marked in H. : folorenan (123.11), folæt (99.24), fosewen (135.2), and in C. focorfen (308.2). Another example is aræð for arærð (123.13, 163.12).

n. Dropping of final—generally inflectional—n is very frequent in H. The n is frequently added above the line, but often the correction is neglected, especially towards the end of the MS. It is the n of the infinitive, weak adj. inflection and subjunctive that most frequently suffers this apocope. Examples are:—læra (303.7), forbera (295.10); his goda weorc (141.11), æa unfæsðræda (305.11); æt we—gearige—mæge (119.5). Other cases are:—ohyrigean (119.12, 229.15), scoldo (131.4), tunga (309.10). In C. Junius has uforwandodlicre in one place (88.23); whether other cases occurred in the original MS. is uncertain, as Junius may have filled in the n without comment. In C. ii. there are several examples—uferra (100.20), with the n added above the line, and others where the vowel has also been weakened—wite (206.19), infin., and næddre (236.22), gen. sing. The same vowel-weakening seems to occur in æa anbestungne sahlas in H. (171.11); and in wolc for wolcen, which occurs twice on p. 285, even the vowel is lost. From the limited range and frequent correction of this peculiarity it is probable that it was rapidly becoming extinct in Alfred's time, although from the want of older W. S. documents it is impossible to determine the extent to which it prevailed in the earlier period. Had the dialect not been fixed and regulated by the literary labours of Alfred and his successors, the loss of final n might easily have developed itself as extensively as in late Anglian, where the retention of the infinitival n is altogether exceptional.

n is also frequently omitted before g, sometimes before c, as in costug (67.1), gebrinð (89.9), drucon (317.2), stragne (164.11) and gemægde (166.22); these last two in C. ii. The Chronicle has adrecton (86.34) for adrencton. There can be no doubt that these forms are genuine. A similar omission occurs in some early Middle E. MSS., where, however, the g is doubled, to compensate for the lost consonant. Such would probably be the strictly correct spelling of the O. E. words as well—costugg, druccon, &c.

In the combination nd the d is often omitted: anweardan (65.7), anwearde (90.5) in C, godcunra (81.16). Compare scylgan (117.12) and the mildred of the Chronicle (52.32) for scyldgan and mildred. The same simplification of nd is common in early Anglian, thus the fragment of Cædmon has scepen for sceppend; and in Danish n is the regular sound of nd, land, landet being pronounced (lahn, lahnet).

m. m sometimes appears instead of n, as in beom (57.9) for beon, and is often changed to n in inflections: hwilon (25.22), yðon (61.20), ðioson (73.19), curiously enough always with a change of the vowel into o. The same change in certain words occurs also in the late language: ðon for ðam in forðonðe is a familiar example.

w. There seems to be a tendency in the Pastoral MSS. to omit w before another consonant: gecnæð (29.1), ætnede (43.19, 291.6), eorum (218.24).

INFLECTIONS.

VERBS.

An isolated archaism in the Pastoral is ic cweðo (397.27) with the old ending of the first person. In the Martyrology ic biddo occurs, and in the Charter there are several examples: ic hatu, sello, but also ic fæstnie, write. It is probable that the retention of the archaism in this MS. is part of the conservative and formal character natural to a legal document: in ic willio ond wille the remarkably antique willio seems purely ornamental.

The ending of the 2nd pers. sing. occasionally appears without the final t: hafas ƿu (193.3), ƿu worhtes (207.11), cans (304.15). Sometimes inclination of the following pronoun takes place with change of ƿ into t: lufastu (43 3), wenstu (63.1).

The endings of the 3rd pers. sing. are very various:—

- (1) -eƿ uncontracted—bireƿ, dweleƿ, demeƿ, gelimpeƿ.
- (2) -et uncontracted—ƿyncet (25.9), deret (237.10). Compare the plurals agniat (25.12) and dot (61.15).
- (3) -ed contracted—gewend (225.22), gefired (249 7).
- (4) -eƿ contracted—birƿ, cymƿ, winƿ.
- (5) -et contracted—fint, gehrist.

Of the origin and explanation of these forms I have treated at length in Appendix I, to which the reader must be referred. It is very doubtful whether any uncontracted -ed forms occur in the Pastoral, as those few cases in which the termination -ed seems to occur probably owe their origin to the carelessness of the scribe in leaving out the stroke of the ƿ; I have, therefore, omitted them. The contracted forms are highly irregular, and differ in many respects from those of the later language: t and tt unite with the termination to form tt, t or ƿ—forgiet, forgiet (from forgitan), licett, licet (licettan), utascieƿ (70.7, from utascetan); st becomes stƿ or more usually st, as in restƿ for rest (142.21), and in some cases the t is inserted where the verbal stem ends in simple s—gecistƿ (50.4, from geceosan), geristƿ (74.8, from gerisan). Besides this stƿ, s becomes st and sƿ as in ræst, ræstƿ (ræsan), forlist, forlistƿ (forleosan); ƿ becomes ƿƿ or ƿ—gecyƿƿ, gecyƿ (cyƿan); d becomes d, as in gefired (gefiredan), dt, tt or t as in bidi (285.15), bitt, bit (from bided, bidet).

The treatment of the root-vowel in the 2nd and 3rd sing. of the pres. indic. also requires some remark. The change of i into y, so extensively developed in the later language, is rare in Alfredian English, occurring chiefly before r-combinations, as in wyrƿ, towyrrƿ for wirƿ, towirƿ or wierƿ, towierrrƿ (p. xxvi, above). Such forms as besyhƿ (67.14) and gesyh̄ð (142.8) are quite exceptional. eā and eō-verbs show ie or i in these cases, as in hiew̄ð (167.16) from heāwan, lieh̄ð from leōgan, never y, which is constant in the later MSS. y only occurs in early W. S. MSS. where there is an ū in the root, as in lyc̄ð, bryc̄ð from lūcan, brūcan. The ie from eā, eō and the y from ū are never interchanged or confounded in any way in early W. S.; hence the explanation of forms like lyh̄ð from leōgan as 'umlauts,' which is given in all the grammars, is as erroneous as it would be in the case of wyr̄ð noticed above.

In early W. S. the subj. plur. still retains its older ending en, instead of the later on, which, however, already begins to show itself, the two MSS. often varying in the same word (see 31.3, 33.18, and 45.25). Such forms as ne forbinden ge (105.7) are interesting as affording an explanation of the well-known difference of ending which depends on the relative position of the verb and its personal pronoun. The frequent dropping of the final n has been noticed above (p. xxxii), we need not therefore be surprised at one MS. having ne bregde ge, while the other retains the final n (173.10, compare also 189.23). It seems not improbable that these curtailed forms may have gradually extended their range, first appearing in imperatives without the negation, and afterwards in all cases of pronominal postposition. That the hæbbe ge, wese ge, &c., of the grammars are of comparatively late origin is shown by the frequent occurrence in the Pastoral of the fuller forms habbað ge (95.11), weahsað ge (109.5), beoð ge (201.21). An example of the later form is beo ge (189.22) in both MSS.

Some traces of subjunctival umlaut in the preterite-present verbs deserve notice. It seems not improbable that the y of such forms as gemyne he (25.3), [he] ne dýrren (25.14), he ȝyrfe (37.21) and he scyle (9.21) are to be explained as umlauts caused by the i of the subjunctive ending. Compare the Gothic gamuni, O. H. G. durft, &c. The same holds good of the subj. doe (p. xxviii, above). It is possible that at an early period such forms as fynde, fynden may have been general in the subj. The later funde, funden, &c. may have arisen from the analogy of the indicatival u in funde, fundon.

The ending a of the weak conjugation in manoda (168.16) for manode is remarkable ; compare oferhergeada (40.4) in the Chronicle. In lære (291.16) and sende (48.9), for lær, send, the e of the imperative sing. has been exceptionally preserved after a long syllable.

Finally, some archaic preterites deserve notice. Cwom for com occurs once (125.20), and only once in the Pastoral ; it occurs in the Martyrology and in the Dialogues of Gregory, and is regular in the Chronicle, which, however, sometimes has com Heht (9.14) for het is likewise an exceptional form in the Pastoral, although it occurs in the inscription on Alfred's jewel and is found in the Martyrology and Chronicle. Wisse and nysse (40.1, 117.2, 355.21) is an archaism—compare Gothic vissa, Icel. vissi—although in the later wiste a return to what must have been the oldest form has place, probably after the analogy of moste and the weak verbs generally.

SUBSTANTIVES.

In hwæthuguningas (155.15) and earða (36.5) the gen. and dat. inflection appears in the archaic form of -as, -a for -es, -e. The gen. gæsðcas (291.9) shows the intermediate stage.

The feminine declension shows interesting traces of the distinction between the ā and i stems in the accus. singulars hyd (141.9), dæd (443.11) for the regular hyde, dæde as in Gothic dēd, O. H. G. tāt, &c., and the plur. nom. and acc. scylde (61.15, 63.20, 72.18), onsine (44.20), byrðenne (52.1) for scylda as in O. Saxon skuldi, &c.

For traces of masc. plurals in -os see note on 59.20.

ADJECTIVES.

The inflections of the adjective, especially in the nom., both sing. and plur., are of great importance in distinguishing early and late W. S. In early W. S. the fem. sing. and neut. plur. end in u, when the preceding syllable is short, or when the adjective ends in -e. In the plural nom. the fem. very often ends in a. In late W. S. the u is everywhere dropped in the fem. sing. and changed to e in the neut. plur., the a of the fem. plur. being likewise changed into e. The change is not phonetic, as is shown by the fact that the inflectional u of sub-stantives is preserved in the later language, but is due to inflectional levelling, the nom. terminations being made uniform, regardless of gender.

EARLY W. S.			LATE W. S.
	M.	F.	N.	M.	F.	N.
Nom. sing.	sum	sumu	sum	sum	sum	sum
	gōd	gōd	gōd	gōd	gōd	gōd
	clæne	clænu	clæne	clæne	clæne	clæne
Nom. plur.	sume	suma	sumu	sume	sume	sume
	gōde	gōda	gōd	gōde	gōde	gōde
	clæne	clæna	clænu	clæne	clæne	clæne.

The u-forms are oftener preserved in later MS. of Alfred's works than most other archaisms, hence they are adopted in all the grammars to the exclusion of the later forms, which, strange to say, are utterly ignored, though regularly employed by Elfric and other writers of the same period. Exceptions to the rules stated above occasionally occur. There are evident traces of that tendency to level the nom. plur. endings which afterwards prevails: both the fem. and neut. plur. occasionally end in e, as in eoure honda (65.17), stīðlice word (166.10), ealle nitenu (109.7). The weakening of the u of the fem. sing. into e occurs, though rarely, both in the early and late W. S.: an lytele burg (399.23). In menniscu (71.12) we have an exceptional case of inflectional u after a long syllable. The anomaly is probably to be explained by the non-accentuation of the -isc, which would tend to counterbalance its quantitative weight. Compare the metrical character of such a M. H. G. word as tugende, where the quantity of the last syllable but one is ignored in the same way.

A less constant but still very frequent peculiarity of the adjective declension consists in the substitution of the strong for the weak ending in the gen. plur., Ʒara godena monna appearing as Ʒara godra monna (81.14, 234.20, 237.21). Still more remarkable is the weak dat. plur. an for um, Ʒæm godan for Ʒæm godum (25.4, 47.12, 421.5), probably after the analogy of the sing. Ʒæm godan. Perhaps, however, the desire of avoiding the incorrect -ra for -ena may have suggested this change of the apparently strong -um. The former theory is supported by ƿæm singulum geƿohte (73.5 in both MSS.), where the plur. ending -um has supplanted the regular sing. -an. Compare also Elfric's Hom. 38.33, 52.26, 56.14. In ƿa anbestungne sahlas (171.11) we have a further example of confusion between weak and strong in the nom. plur., unless it be merely a case of the loss of final n (see p. xxxii, above).

PRONOUNS.

The masc. pron. of the 3rd person often appears in the sing. nom. in the older form of hi, hie (56.3, 60.18, 99.4, 312.8), compare the Old Saxon hi, hie, he and the Old Frisian hi, he. Conversely the plur. nom. sometimes assumes the weakened form he (26.22, 44.4, 87.1, 305.14), instead of the regular hi, hie.

It is not improbable that to this phonetic confusion may be partly owing the extraordinary fluctuation between sing. and plur. which prevails in the Pastoral, especially in those cases where the pronoun of the third person is used in a general sense, like the German man: 'ac monige bioð ƿara ðe hie gehealdað wið unryht hæmed, and swa ðeah his agenra ryhtthiwenan ne brycð swa swa he mid ryhte sceolde' (399.7). Other instances under 53.1, 127.22, 163.1, and in the Chronicle.

No example occurs in the Pastoral of the accusatives mec, ƿec, although the inscription on Alfred's jewel, ÆLFRED MEC HEHT GEWYRCAN, and the ic biððo ƿæc of the Martyrology, where also mec occurs, show that these forms were not yet extinct in his time. Ussum for urum (355.24) is an isolated instance of the older form of the possessive of the 1st pers. plur.; usses also occurs in the Dialogues of Gregory.

PREPOSITIONS.

The prepositions, both alone and in composition, present many points of interest. For often appears as fær: fær offermettum (113.7), færhæfðnesse (41.14, 87.24), færwyrd (133.20). Fore often loses its final e (10.13, 117.23, 194.16); while in fore eacmodnesse (106.5) fore is substituted for for. Geond (giond) appears as gind (9.10, 59.23, 259.10). Of appears once in the antiquated shape of ob (304.9), where the archaism seems to be suggested by the preceding Obab; in æfweardan (453.2) the vowel is archaic. To as te in tefleowe (49.11), to teweorpanne (443.33), weorðað te færwyrde (463.6); compare the M. H. G. zeruliesen, zerwerfen, ze schande werden. Ymbe often loses its final vowel: 3.10, 49.12, 200.4. Lastly, the preposition in is still preserved in a few cases, although even in Alfred's time it is almost completely absorbed by on. An example is in ƿæs monnes mode (155.22). On itself occasionally shows the unlabialized form an (49.11, 61.9, 104.22). The loss of the archaic te and fær, the irregular labialization of af, and the absorption of in into on, itself a labialized an, all seem to point to that phonetic levelling which we have already encountered in treating of the adjective inflections: the regular change of an into on, the existence of a to and for beside the te and fær made o, as it were, the representative prepositional vowel; hence the loss of the older forms te, fær, and in, and the labialization of af.

I will conclude this sketch of the peculiarities of Alfred's English with some general syntactical and stilistic remarks.

In tracing the developement of O. E. prose, the interesting question arises, How far must the influence of Latin models be taken into consideration? In other words, Can the numerous translations of Latin works, especially the translations of Alfred, be regarded as faithful representations of the natural utterance of the translators? There seem to be strong reasons for answering this question in the affirmative, with certain limitations. In the first place, we must remember that the O. E. writers did not learn the art of prose composition from Latin models: they had a native historical prose, which shows a gradual elaboration and improvement, quite independent of Latin or any other foreign influence. This is proved by an examination of the historical pieces inserted into the Chronicle. The first of these, the account of the death of Cynewulf and Cynehard, is composed in the abrupt, disconnected style of oral conversation: it shows prose composition in its rudest and most primitive form, and bears a striking resemblance to the earliest Icelandic prose¹. In the detailed narratives of Alfred's campaigns and sea-fights the style assumes a different aspect: without losing the force and simplicity of the earlier pieces, it becomes refined and polished to a high degree, and yet shows no traces of foreign influence. Accordingly, in the Orosius, the only translation of Alfred's which from the similarity of its subject admits of a direct comparison, we find almost exactly the same language and style as in the contemporary historical pieces of the Chronicle. In the Bede, where the ecclesiastical prevails over the purely historical, the general style is less national, less idiomatic than in the Orosius, and in purely theological works, such as the Pastoral, the influence of the Latin original reaches its height. Yet even here there seems to be no attempt to engraft Latin idioms on the English version: the foreign influence is only indirect, chiefly showing itself in the occasional clumsiness that results from the difficulty of expressing and defining abstract ideas in a language unused to theological and metaphysical subtleties.

There is evident difficulty in connecting the clauses of a long argument, arising from the paratactic nature of O. E. syntax, and consequent scarcity of particles and freedom in their use. Hence the monotonous repetition of such words as ðonne and forðæm in the most varied senses: 'Ðonne bið suiðe sweotol ðætte him ðonne losað beforan Gode his ryhtwisnes, ðonne he ðurh his agene geornfulnesse gesyngað unniedenga, ðonne bið suiðe sueotul, ðæt he ðæt good na ne dyde ðær he hit for ðæm ege dorste forlætan' (265.10). As in all early languages the tendency to correlation is strongly developed, as shown in the frequent use of ðonne—ðonne, forðæm—forðæm swelc—swelc, &c., in the same sentence, where in modern E. the idea would be expressed only once. Hence also pleonasm and repetitions of all kinds abound, especially with the personal pronouns: 'se oferspræca wer ne wierð he næfre geryht ne gelæred on ðisse worlde' (279.21). The modal and auxiliary verbs are often introduced in a very loose manner, as in the following sentences: 'forbær ðæt he ne dorste ofslean' (199.2); '[hie] hie næfre bilwitlice willað monian' (145.1), where the Latin has simply admonent; so also wile toweorpan (169.7) corresponds to the present destruit. In these and similar instances the willan gives no sense of futurity: it is entirely otiose, as much so as the knáttu in the ‘knáttu öll ginnúngavé brinna,’ of the Haustlong, and the kunde in Wolfram’s ‘mit zuht si kunden wider gên, zuo den êrsten vieren stên’ (Parz. 234.1 Lachm.). Past tenses, especially the pluperfect, are often strengthened by a pleonastic ær, as in this passage: ‘ǣt hit sceal suiðe hrædlice afeallan of ǣare weamodnesse ðe hit ær onahæfen wæs’ (297.20), where the Latin has simply erexerant.

Another result of the difficulty in reproducing the sense of the original is the use of anacoluthons, which are very frequent in the Pastoral: ‘Ælfred cyning hateð gretan . . . & ðe cyðan hate’ (3.1); ‘ond symle ymb ǣt ðe hine ðonne tueode, ðonne orn he eft innto ǣam temple’ (103.4). Compare also 99.17, 101.15, 107.20.

The evidence afforded by a direct comparison of the translation with the original is of a similar character. Compared with the other works of Alfred, the Pastoral is a very close rendering—no original matter is introduced, nor are sentences expanded into long paragraphs as in the Boethius; yet, according to modern notions, each section of Alfred’s is a paraphrase rather than a translation of the corresponding piece of Latin. The rendering of the simplest passages is often attended with wide deviations from the words of the original, which are transposed, omitted and expanded, even when it would seem simpler and easier to have followed the original literally. It is evident that the sole object of the translator was to reproduce the sense of the original in such a way as to be intelligible to an unlearned Englishman of the ninth century. The anxiety to bring out the meaning of the Latin as vividly as possible is strikingly shown in the frequent rendering of a single Latin word by two English ones of practically identical or similar meaning; thus, ‘per dolorem purgant’ is rendered, ‘ðurh sar ond ðurh sorge geclænsiað ond geeaðmedað’ (34.4) and ‘servi’ in the heading of XXIX. becomes ‘ða ðegnas ond eac ða ðeowas.’ In those days, when grammars and dictionaries were hardly known or used, Latin was studied much more as a living language than it is now; sentences were grasped as wholes, without the minute analysis of modern scholarship, and were consequently translated as wholes.

These remarks will be enough to give a general idea of the relation of the Pastoral to its original, and also of its value in determining the syntactical usages of O. E. : for special syntactic information I must refer to the notes on the several passages.

Many other points of difference between early and late W. S. can only be treated of satisfactorily in a dictionary, especially those which depend on slight variations in isolated words. The investigation of changes in the vocabulary would, of course, require very full and elaborate dictionary work ; and even if such work existed, its results would never be entirely free from doubt, because of the limited range of the literature. It seems, however, tolerably certain that many words in familiar use in Alfred's time became extinct in the eleventh century, or were only used in poetry. Such words as dogor (281.13), holde haweras (229.17), and 'habban me to gamene' (249.1) sound archaic and poetical after reading such a writer as Elfric ; while leorningeniht, on the other hand, for which Alfred employs ægn, has a distinctly late character.

NOTICE.

THIS Volume must be considered complete, and may be bound, notwithstanding that the Latin Text announced in the title-page has not appeared. The Editor's engagements have prevented his preparing the Latin Text, and he may possibly never edit it. If he does, it will appear in a separate Part, and should be bound separately, as it will thus be so much handier for comparison with the Old and Modern English Translations of it in the present Volume.

THIS BOOK IS FOR WORCESTER.

King Alfred bids greet bishop Wærferth with his words, lovingly and with friendship ; and I let it be known to thee that it has very often come into my mind, what wise men there formerly were throughout England, both of sacred and secular orders ; and how happy times there were then throughout England ; and how the kings who had power over the nation in those days obeyed God and his ministers ; and they preserved peace, morality, and order at home, and at the same time enlarged their territory abroad ; and how they prospered both with war and with wisdom; and also the sacred orders how zealous they were both in teaching and learning, and in all the services they owed to God; and how foreigners came to this land in search of wisdom and instruction, and how we should now have to get them from abroad if we were to have them. So general was its decay in England that there were very few on this side of the Humber who could understand their rituals in English, or translate a letter from Latin into English; and I believe that there were not many beyond the Humber. There were so few of them that I cannot remember a single one south of the Thames when I came to the throne. Thanks be to God Almighty that we have any teachers among us now. And therefore I command thee to do as I believe thou art willing, to disengage thyself from worldly matters as often as thou canst, that thou mayest apply the wisdom which God has given thee wherever thou canst. Consider what punishments would come upon us on account of this world, if we neither loved it (wisdom) ourselves nor suffered other men to obtain it: we should love the name only of Christian, and very few of the virtues. When I considered all this I remembered also how I saw, before it had been all ravaged and burnt, how the churches throughout the whole of England stood filled with treasures and books, and there was also a great multitude of God's servants, but they had very little knowledge of the books, for they could not understand anything of them, because they were not written in their own language.

As if they had said : "Our forefathers, who formerly held these places, loved wisdom, and through it they obtained wealth and bequeathed it to us. In this we can still see their tracks, but we cannot follow them, and therefore we have lost both the wealth and the wisdom, because we would not incline our hearts after their example." When I remembered all this, I wondered extremely that the good and wise men who were formerly all over England, and had perfectly learnt all the books, did not wish to translate them into their own language. But again I soon answered myself and said : "They did not think that men would ever be so careless, and that learning would so decay ; through that desire they abstained from it, and they wished that the wisdom in this land might increase with our knowledge of languages. Then I remembered how the law was first known in Hebrew, and again, when the Greeks had learnt it, they translated the whole of it into their own language, and all other books besides. And again the Romans, when they had learnt it, they translated the whole of it through learned interpreters into their own language. And also all other Christian nations translated a part of them into their own language. Therefore it seems better to me, if ye think so, for us also to translate some books which are most needful for all men to know into the language which we can all understand, and for you to do as we very easily can if we have tranquillity enough, that is that all the youth now in England of free men, who are rich enough to be able to devote themselves to it, be set to learn as long as they are not fit for any other occupation, until that they are well able to read English writing: and let those be afterwards taught more in the Latin language who are to continue learning and be promoted to a higher rank. When I remembered how the knowledge of Latin had formerly decayed throughout England, and yet many could read English writing, I began, among other various and manifold troubles of this kingdom, to translate into English the book which is called in Latin Pastoralis, and in English Shepherd's Book, sometimes word by word and sometimes according to the sense, as I had learnt it from Plegmund my archbishop, and Asser my bishop, and Grimbold my mass-priest, and John my mass-priest. And when I had learnt it as I could best understand it, and as I could most clearly interpret it, I translated it into English; and I will send them with him, or they be lent out anywhere, or any one make a copy from them.

This message Augustine over the salt sea brought from the south to the islanders, as the Lord's champion had formerly decreed it, the pope of Rome. The wise Gregorius was versed in many true doctrines through the wisdom of his mind, his hoard of cunning thoughts.

of in this present book, lest they seem to any one easy to undertake; and I also advise no one to desire them who manages them rashly; and let him who desires them rashly and unrighteously fear ever undertaking them. Now I wish this discourse to rise in the mind of the learner as on a ladder, step by step, nearer and nearer, until it firmly stands on the floor of the mind which learns it; and therefore I divide it into four parts: one of the divisions is how he is to attain the dignity; the second how he is to live in it; the third is how he is to teach in it; the fourth is how he is to desire to perceive his own faults, and subdue them, lest, having attained it, he lose his humility, or, again, lest his life be unlike his ministration, or he be too presumptuous and severe because he has attained the post of instruction; but let the fear of his own faults moderate it, and let him confirm with the example of his life his teaching for those who do not believe his words; and when he has performed a good work, let him remember the evil he has done, that his contrition for his evil deeds may moderate his joy for his good works; lest he be puffed up in spirit before the eyes of the unseen Judge, and inflated with pride, and so through his egotism lose his good works. But there are many who seem to me to be very similar in want of learning, who, although they were never disciples, yet wish to be teachers, and think the burden of teaching very light, because they do not know the power of its greatness. From the very door of this book, that is, from the beginning of this discourse, the unwary are driven away and blamed, who arrogate to themselves the art of teaching which they never learned.

Since no art can be taught by him who has not diligently learnt it before, why are the unlearned ever so rash as to undertake the care of teaching, when the art of teaching is the art of all arts? Who does not know that the wounds of the mind are more obscure than the wounds of the body? And yet worldly physicians are ashamed of undertaking to cure wounds which they cannot see, especially if they neither understand the disease nor the herbs which are to be employed. And sometimes those who are to be physicians of the mind, although they cannot understand anything of the spiritual precepts, are not ashamed of taking upon themselves to be physicians of the mind. But since now all the honour of this world is turned by the grace of God to the honour of the pious, so that now the most pious are in greatest estimation, many pretend to be pious teachers because they desire great worldly honour. On which subject Christ himself exclaimed, and said thus: "They desire to be greeted first, and honoured in market-places and at banquets, and to recline first at suppers, and they seek the most honourable seat in assemblies." Since with pride and vainglory they thus arrive at the honour of pastoral care, they are unable properly to fulfil the duties of their ministration and to become teachers of humility; but their exhortation in teaching is disgraced, when they teach one thing, having learnt another. Such men God chided through the prophet, and reproached them with such doings, when he said: "They reigned, but not by my will; they were princes, and I knew them not." Those who so rule, rule through their own power, not through that of the highest Judge, since they are not supported on any foundation of the divine power, nor chosen for any excellence, but they are inflamed by their own desire, so as to seize on so high an office rather than obtain it by their deserts. And the eternal and unseen Judge exalts them as if he knew them not, and suffers it without interfering, as an example of patience. But though they perform many wonders in their office, when they come to him he says, "Depart from me, ye evildoers; I know not what ye are." Again, he rebuked them through the prophet for their want of learning, when he said, "The shepherds had not understanding ; they had my law, and knew me not." He who knows not God's commands is not acknowledged by God. The same said St. Paul : "He who knows not God, God knows not him." Foolish teachers come for the people's sins. Therefore often through the teacher's folly the disciples come to grief, and often through the teacher's wisdom foolish disciples are preserved. If, then, both are foolish, we must consider what Christ himself said in his Gospel, he said : "If the blind lead the blind, they will both fall into a pit." On the same subject the Psalmist spoke : "May their eyes be dimmed that they may not see, and their back always bent." He did not say this because he wished or desired it to befall any man, but he prophesied how it was to happen. For the eyes are the teachers, and the back the disciples ; because the eyes are in the front and upper part of the body, and the back comes after everything ; and in the same way the teachers go before the people, and the people after. When the eyes of the teacher's mind are dimmed, which ought to go before with good examples, the people bend their backs under many heavy burdens.

II. Nor, again, let the learned, who are not willing to live as they have learnt in books, undertake the dignity of teaching.

Many wise teachers also fight with their behaviour against the spiritual precepts which they teach with words, when they live in one way and teach in another. Often when the shepherd goes by dangerous ways, the flock, which is too unwary, falls. Of such shepherds the prophet spoke: "Ye trod down the grass of God's sheep, and ye defiled their water with your feet, though ye drank it before undefiled." Thus the teachers drink very pure water when they learn the divine wisdom, and also when they teach it; but they defile it with their own vices, and set an example to the people by their vices, not by their instruction. Though the people thirst for instruction, they cannot drink it, but it is defiled by the teachers doing one thing and teaching another. Of whom again God spoke through the prophet: "Bad priests are the people's fall." if they do wrong, and sins become very widely extended, since they are so much honoured. But they would of their own accord flee the burden of so great a sin, being unworthy of it, if they would hear with the ears of their heart, and carefully consider the words of Christ, when he said, "He who deceives one of these little ones, it were better for him to have a millstone tied to his neck, and so to be thrown to the bottom of the sea." By the mill is signified the circuit of this world, and also of man's life, and their toil, and by the bottom of the sea their end and the last judgment.

 The mill is turned when the man is ended; the great mill is turned when this world is ended. He who attains holy orders, and with

III. Of the burden of rule, and how he is to despise all toils, and how afraid he must be of every luxury.

We have said thus much in few words, because we wished to show how great is the burden of teaching, lest any one dare undertake it who is unworthy of it, lest he through desire of worldly honour undertake the guidance of perdition.  that is Christ, shunned undertaking earthly rule. He who surpasses all the wisdom of the higher spirits, and reigned in heaven before the world was, it is written in the Gospel that the Jews came and wished to make him king by force. When the Saviour perceived it, he dismissed them and hid himself. Who could easier rule men without sin than he who created them ? He did not shun supremacy because any man was worthier of it, but he wished to set us an example of not coveting it too much ; and also wished to suffer for us. He wished not to be king, yet of his own free will he came to the cross. He shunned the honour of reigning, and chose the punishment of the most ignominious death, that we who are his members might learn from him to shun the seductions of this world ; and also that we might not dread its fear and terror, and for the sake of truth, love toil and dread luxury, and therefore avoid it. For through luxury men are often inflated with pride, while hardships through pain and sorrow purify and humble them. In prosperity the heart is puffed up ; in adversity, even if it were formerly puffed up, it is humbled. In prosperity men forget themselves ; in adversity they must remember themselves, even if they are unwilling. In prosperity they often lose the good they formerly did ; in adversity they often repair the evil they long ago did. Often a man is subjected to the instruction of adversity, although before he would not follow the moral example and instruction of his teacher. But although schooled and taught by adversity, soon, if he attain to power, through the homage of the people he becomes proud and accustomed to presumption. As king Saul at first declined the throne, and deemed himself quite unworthy of it. But as soon as he obtained the rule of the kingdom, he became proud, and was angry with that same Samuel who formerly brought him to the throne, and consecrated him, because he told him of his faults before the people, since he could not control him before with their approval; and when he wished to depart from him, he seized him, and tore his clothes, and insulted him. So also David, who pleased God in nearly everything, as soon as he had not the burden of so many troubles, he was wounded with pride, and showed it very cruelly in the murder of Uriah, his own faithful servant, for the shameless desire of his wife. The same one who formerly spared him who had sinned against him with so many evils, became so immoderately eager for the death of the virtuous Uriah, without any crime or offence against himself. The same David who forbore injuring the king who brought him into such painful exile, and drove him from his country, when he had him completely in his power in the cave, took a lappet of his coat as a sign of having had him in his power, and yet let him escape for his former allegiance. The same David exposed his own army to great danger, and caused many to perish, when he laid snares for his faithful and innocent servant. The sin would have removed him very far from the number of all the saints, had not his toils and troubles come to his help again.

IV. And how often the trouble of rule and government distracts the mind of the ruler.

Very often the manifold care of teaching when it is undertaken disturbs the heart, and when the mind is divided among many objects it is the less firm in each, and also less useful. Of which spoke the wise Solomon: "My son, do not divide thy mind among too many things, and thy works likewise." For often when a man loses the fear and firmness which he ought properly to have within him, his mind allures him to many useless works. He is concerned for them, and very mindful of them, and forgets himself, when he occupies his mind with the useless works more than he ought. He is like the man who is occupied on a journey with other affairs, until he knows not whither he formerly wished to go, and cannot think what he loses in the delay, and how greatly he sins therein. Hezekiah, king of Israel, did not think that he sinned when he led the foreign ambassadors into his treasury, and showed them his treasures. But he experienced God's anger in the misery which came on his child after his days. And yet he thought it was no sin. Often when any one happens to do anything famous and wonderful, and those who are under him, admiring it, praise him, he is puffed up in spirit, and completely calls down on himself the severe anger of his Judge, although he does not show it in bad deeds. Yet through his pride the Judge is compelled to anger, and the Judge, who knows all the thoughts of the mind, also judges those thoughts. We can hide our thoughts and desires from men, but not from God. The Babylonian king was greatly puffed up in spirit for his power and success when he rejoiced at the size and beauty of the city he had built, and extolled himself in thought above all other men, and spoke silently in his mind: "How, is not this the great Babylon which I myself built as a throne of splendour, to adorn and glorify myself, with my own might and strength?" The silent voice the unseen Judge very soon heard, and answered him very distinctly with the punishments with which he very quickly punished it. He rebuked and blamed his pride by depriving him of his worldly kingdom, and turning him into an irrational animal, and broke his spirit by associating him with beasts of the field; and so by the severe punishment he lost his state of man. To the very one who thought he was above all other men it happened that he hardly knew whether he was a man

However, although I tell this now, I do not blame great works nor legitimate power, but I blame a man for being conceited on that account; and I would strengthen the weakness of their hearts, and forbid the incompetent such desires, lest any of them presume to seize on power or the office of teaching so rashly, lest those attempt such dangerous paths who cannot stand firmly on level ground.

V. Concerning those who can be useful as teachers with their example and virtues, and for their own ease avoid it.

body pure from lusts, the second is that they are strict in the severity of abstinence; the third is that they are full of the dainties of learning; the fourth is that they are patient in tedious things and in every delay, and humble in authority; the fifth is that they have spirit and boldness enough to possess authority; the sixth is that they are beneficent; the seventh is that they are zealous and severe for the cause of righteousness. Such as these then, if, when such power is offered them, they refuse it, it often happens that they are deprived of the gifts which God bestowed on them for the sake of many men, not of them alone. When they consider only how they themselves may become most perfect, and do not care what becomes of other men, they thus deprive themselves of the benefits which

He said: Thou knowest that I love thee. And then said the Lord: Feed my sheep, if thou lovest me." If, then, the feeding of the sheep is the sign of love, why does he, to whom God has given such qualities, refuse to feed his flock, unless he wish to say that he does not love the Lord and high Shepherd of all creatures? Of which the apostle Paul spoke: "If Christ died for us all, all men will die" What is, therefore, better while we live than not to live in the lusts of our flesh, but after his commands who died for us and rose again? if he leave a brother, let him take his wife. If he beget a child

 But if he wish to refuse the woman, let her spit in his face, and let his relations take the shoe off one of his feet, that his house may afterwards be called the house of the one-shoed." This was a lawful sentence in the old law, and is now an example for us. The brother who died first signifies Christ. He appeared after the resurrection, and said: "Go and tell it to my brothers that they may come to Galilee, where they will see me." He died as it were without children, for he had not yet filled up the number of his elect. As in the old law the wife of the brother who had died was offered to the living brother that he might take her, so it is proper that the care of the holy Church, that is the assembly of Christ's people, be offered to him who can superintend and rule it well. But if he refuse it, it is proper for the woman to spit in his face, that is, for the assembly of the people to blame him, exactly as if they spat in his face, because he would not give what God gave him, and help the people with what he helped him with. In the same way it is proper for the holy assembly to blame the advantages of those who wish to appropriate them to themselves alone, and will not help others with them. He is also rightly shod on one foot only, and he shall be called in ignominy the one-shoed. Of which Christ spoke in his Gospel: "See to your feet, that ye be ready to go in the path of peace after the commands of my books." blamelessly; but if we neglect the wants of our neighbours, and think about our own specially, then one of our feet is very disgracefully unshod. There are many men, as we have remarked above, who are honoured with great and many gifts of God, and then are inflamed with the desire of the contemplation of God's wisdom alone, and so avoid the profitable obedience of teaching, and will not consider how they can be most useful to their neighbours, but love solitude and shun the face of men. But if God determines to judge them righteously and severely, and does not of his mercy spare them, they are guilty of as many sins as they could have corrected faults with their instruction and example, if they had been willing to associate with men. What reason have those, who shine with such works and can be so useful to their neighbours, for trusting rather

And there are many who avoid it out of humility alone, because they do not wish to be raised above those whom they think better than themselves. There is no doubt that if such humility is enforced with other virtues, it is before God's eyes genuine humility, when he does not out of any obstinacy reject the useful works which are offered for his acceptance. It is not true humility, if a man perceives that it is God's will that he be above others, for him to refuse it, but to submit to God's will and decree, and relinquish the vice of obstinacy.

 When he is exalted and appointed that he may be useful to others in the post which is offered him, he should avoid it in spirit, and yet out of obedience accept it.

many are also compelled to undertake it very blamelessly. This we can clearly understand, if we think of the two prophets whom God wished to send to teach. The one voluntarily undertook the teaching and the journey. The other, through fear of not doing it so well, refused. This was Jeremiah. When he wished to send him, he begged him humbly not to send him, and said: "Behold, Lord, I am a youth; what can I say?" But Isaiah, when God asked whom he should send, said: "I am ready; send me." See now what different speeches came from the mouth of these two men. But they arose from a very similar desire, for they flowed from the same spring, although they flowed in different directions, the source was true love. About which we have two precepts: one is to love God, the other to love our neighbour. From love Isaiah desired to be as useful as possible to his neighbours in this earthly life, and therefore he desired the ministration of teaching. Jeremiah desired always to continue in the love of his Creator, and therefore he refused, and did not wish to be sent to teach. The same charge that he blamelessly dreaded to undertake, the other very laudably desired. The one feared losing what he had gained in silence and meditation; the other feared concealing some mischief by his reticence, while he might have spoken to advantage, if he had zealously laboured. But we ought to consider both cases very narrowly, for he who refused did not altogether refuse, and he who wished to be sent saw that he was first purified by the coals of the altar, lest any one durst undertake unpurified so holy a work of the pure ministration of the priesthood, or under the pretext of humility haughtily refuse it, as if he simulated humility, and yet showed himself vainglorious, if the divine grace chooses him.

 But since it is so difficult for any man to know when he is purified, he can with so much the less hesitation decline the ministration; and yet he must not decline it too obstinately, as we remarked above, when he sees that it is the divine will for him to do so. Moses fulfilled both requirements when he refused so great a sovereignty.
 He was both willing and unwilling, and yet from humility he consented. We know that he would not have been humble, if he had undertaken the rule of so vast a host without fear; and, again, he would have been presumptuous, if he had refused to be subject to his Maker. But he did both out of humility and docility. He contemplated himself, and thought that he could not do it, and yet consented, for he trusted in the might of him who offered it him.

 The holy man saw that he had God's help, and yet feared to undertake the leadership of the people, and yet fools are not afraid because of their own sins to rule others, and cannot infer from such an example how great sin and presumption it is. God himself encouraged Moses to rule, yet he feared; and yet such wretches try for, and aspire to undertake the dignity and burden; and those who are oppressed

But those who wish to seize on such authority excuse their desire with the words of St. Paul : "He who desires to be a bishop, desires a good work." If he praised and encouraged, again he forbade the desire, saying, "A bishop should be blameless." It is besides openly said: "I praise your desire, but learn to know what it is, and if ye neglect to estimate yourselves at your real worth, the higher the authority ye attain to, the more manifest and notorious will ye make your unfitness." Thus the great craftsman incites and encourages his disciples, and sternly rebukes their pride by blaming them, that he may bring them to life. We must also reflect that at the time when the office of bishop was in such high estimation, he who accepted it accepted martyrdom. At that time it was praiseworthy for a man to desire to become a bishop, for there was no doubt that through it he would arrive at a cruel martyrdom. It is a proof of a bishop's holding his office well for him to end it with good works. Therefore it is said: "He who desires the office of bishop, desires a good work." He, therefore, who does not aspire to that office from the desire of such works, is his own witness that he desires his own vainglory; he not only does wrong in not loving the holy ministration, but altogether slights it; and when he aspires to the honour of rule, his heart is nourished with the contemplation of the desire of having other men subject to him, and his own exaltation, and rejoices in being praised. Hence he is puffed up in spirit, and rejoices in the possession of abundant wealth. He simulates humility, and through it seeks the possessions of this world. Under the pretence of mortifying his pride he increases it. Instead of distributing his property he accumulates it. When the mind thinks to make humility a pretext for pride, that which he displays openly he perverts in secret.

I.X How the mind that desires to be above others deceives itself, when it thinks to perform many good works, and simulates it before other men, if he has worldly honour, and wishes to neglect it when he has it.

But when he wishes to undertake honour and rule, he thinks on the surface of his heart that he will do many good works in his office, and acknowledges in his inmost heart that he desires it out of pride and conceit of authority, but ponders and considers in the bark of his mind that he will perform many good works, but in the pith is something else hid. On the surface of his mind he is deceived about

loves not : he loves the glory of this world, and pretends to shun and dread it. When he desires in his heart to rule, he is very timid and cautious ; when he has what he wished to have, he is very bold. While he is aspiring to it he dreads not attaining it, and when he attains the honour he thinks he who granted him the honour was bound to grant it of necessity, and enjoys the divine honour in a worldly spirit, and very soon forgets his former pious resolutions. How can it otherwise happen but that the mind which was formerly diverted from its usual routine through the desire of worldly honour returns thereto when it has attained its desire ? And the eyes of the mind soon return to its former works. But let every man consider before how useful and obedient he is to those he is bound to obey in his actions, and by his performance under these circumstances he can judge whether, if he is to have higher authority, he is able to carry out his former intentions, for men seldom learn humility in a high station if they were proud and reckless in a humbler one. How can he avoid praise and vainglory when he is exalted, who formerly desired them when he was without power? How can he be without covetousness when he has to consult the interests of many, if formerly he would not avoid it when he had to consult his own interests alone? Let him beware of allowing himself to be deceived with his own imagination, lest he believe that he will do well in that station when he would not in the lesser; for in a higher station men oftener lose good habits than learn them there, if they had them not in a humbler station and in greater leisure. An untaught steersman can very easily steer straight enough on a smooth sea, but the skilled steersman does not trust him on a rough sea and in great storms. And what is sovereignty and rule but the mind's storm, which ever tosses the ship of the heart with the waves of the thoughts, and is driven hither and thither in very narrow straits of words and works, as if it were wrecked amongst great and many rocks? What need is there to say more about this, except that he who is known to possess the above-mentioned qualities is to undertake it if he is obliged, and he who is not fit is not to approach it, even if compelled? not to tie up the money he has received in the napkin mentioned by Christ in his Gospel, that is, let him not tie up the divine gifts he has received, both in virtues and in riches, in the cloth of his sloth, and through his laziness hide it, lest he be reproached for it afterwards. Let those who are devoid of such gifts, and yet wish for supremacy, beware lest they seduce with their bad example those who are going the right way to the kingdom of heaven, as the Pharisees did. they neither cared to go the right way themselves, nor to suffer others. Such things are to be considered and meditated on, because he who undertakes the office of bishop undertakes the charge of the people's health, and he must traverse the country like a physician, and visit the houses of sick men. that no man of their kin or household was to offer to his God any bread, nor come to his ministration, if he had any blemish: if he were blind or lame, or had too big or too little a nose, or if he were crooked-nosed, or had broken hands or feet, or were hump-backed or blear-eyed, or afflicted with albugo or continual scabbiness, or eruptions or hydrocele. He is quite blind who has no conception of the light of sublime contemplation, and is enveloped in the darkness of this present life, when he never sees with his mind's eye the future light so as to love it, and knows not whither he is tending with the steps of his works. About which Anna prophesied, saying: "The Lord will direct the feet of his saints, and the unrighteous shall lament in darkness." He is altogether lame who knows whither he ought to go, and for the infirmity of his mind, although he see the way of life, cannot properly follow it, when he has accustomed himself to good works and then relaxes his vigour, and will not raise it to the state of perfect works ; then the steps of the works cannot entirely arrive at the desired point. Of which Paul spoke :

 "Stretch out your relaxed hands and knees, and proceed rightly, and limp no longer, but be saved." The little nose is want of sagacity ; for with the nose we distinguish odours, therefore the nose is put for sagacity. By sagacity we distinguish between good and bad, and choose the good and reject the bad. Of which it is said in the praise of the bride : "Thy nose resembles the tower on Mount Lebanon." For the holy assembly through sagacity sees and understands whence every temptation comes, and whence they are to expect the impending attack of vices. And there are many men who, not wishing to be thought fools, often try to speak and meditate more than is profitable for them to do, and are led astray in their meditation. The big and crooked nose is the desire of over-sagacity, when a man desires it more eagerly than he ought, he has too big and crooked a nose, for his sagacity shames itself by its excessive contemplation. The broken hand and foot is when a man knows the path of God's commands and will not follow it, but is deprived of every good work and frustrated, not at all like a lame or diseased man, who is sometimes in motion, sometimes at rest, while the broken foot is always entirely deprived of motion.

 and when they hear aught of the excellence of the kingdom of heaven, their hearts are oppressed by the burdens of their perverse habits, so that they cannot exalt the state of their mind. Of which the Psalmist spoke: "I am bowed and humiliated on all sides." And, again, Truth itself spoke about the same sins: "Their seed fell among thorns."
 That is those who hear the word of God, and by the cares and desires of this world and its wealth the seed of God's words is smothered, although they spring up, so that they cannot flourish or bear fruit. He frequent flow of tears, until the sharpness of the pupil is dulled. Thus there are very many who wound their mind with the works of this fleshly life who could clearly and sharply perceive righteousness with their understanding, but with the habit of bad works the mind is dimmed. He is altogether blear-eyed who has a naturally good heart and understanding, and of himself disgraces it with his bad habits and perverse desires. Of which was well spoken through the angel: "Anoint your eyes with salve, that ye may see." We anoint the eyes of our heart to see better, when we aid our understanding with the medicine of good works, so that it is sharpened enough to perceive the brightness of true light. He has altogether albugo in his mind's eyes who can in no wise see righteousness, but is blinded with folly so that he does not understand celestial righteousness. A man can see with the pupil of the eye if it is not covered with albugo, but if it is entirely covered with albugo, he cannot see anything. So also it is said of the mind's eyes that if the understanding of human thought perceives that it is itself foolish and sinful, through that idea it grasps the conception of inner brightness; but if he himself thinks that he is wise and prudently righteous, he thereby deprives himself of the recognition of celestial light, and he understands so much the less of the brightness of true light by extolling himself in spirit with such pride and egotism; as is said of certain men: "They said they were wise, and therefore they became foolish." from wantonness. The scab of leprosy is a type of fornication. The body is leprous when the inflammation of the body spreads to the skin. Thus temptation is first in the mind and then spreads to the skin until it bursts forth in actions. Doubtlessly, unless the mind oppose the desire beforehand, the internal inflammation breaks forth and becomes scab, causing many external sores with the perverse actions. Hence Paul desired to wipe off the prurience of the flesh with the words he spoke: "Let no temptation seize on you unless human;" as if he had openly said: "It is only human for a man to suffer temptations in his mind from the desire of bad deeds, but it is devilish for him to carry out his desire." worm on his body whose mind is filled with covetousness, which, unless soon checked, will increase enormously. Ringworm doubtlessly spreads over the body without pain, and yet disfigures the limb ; scab is not at all painful, and itch is very mild, and yet if it is allowed to go too far, it wounds, and the wound pains. Thus covetousness wounds the mind that it enslaves with desires when it excites in the mind the desire of obtaining something. It promises him enough of everything, which, although it pleases and delights the mind, yet wounds it by causing enmity. Through the wound he loses the beauty of his limbs, when he through the evil work loses the beauty of other good works, as if he polluted his whole body by perverting his mind with every vice, which Paul confirmed by the remark that "covetousness is the root of all evil." He who is afflicted with hydrocele cannot carry out his shameful desires, and yet is excessively troubled with continually thinking of it, and yet can never accomplish the unrighteous deed, although the mind is altogether desirous of lasciviousness without any restraint or hesitation if he could accomplish it. Hydrocele is caused by the humours of the body collecting in the member, so that it swells and becomes heavy and disfigured. He is altogether hydrocelous whose whole mind is addicted to wantonness and folly, when he bears in his heart the burden of shame, and yet does not too perversely carry it out in evil deeds, although he cannot dismiss it from his mind, nor fully habituate himself to good works, for he is secretly oppressed by the burden of shame. Whoever, then, is subject to one of these vices is forbidden to offer bread to God, for it is to be expected that he will not be competent to wash away the sins of others while he is harassed by his own. We have briefly stated above what kind of man the proper pastor and teacher ought to be, and also he who has cause to fear being incompetent. We have said above what kind of man is to be appointed bishop; we will now say how he is to conduct himself when he has attained the dignity.

XII. How he who attains the dignity properly and regularly is to conduct himself therein.

The bishop's works must surpass other men's works as much as the shepherd's life is superior to that of the flock. It behoves him to think and carefully consider how very necessary it is for him to be bound to righteousness with the rope of understanding through whose dignity the people is called flock; it befits the shepherd to be lofty in works, profitable in words, and discreet in silence; he must grieve for the troubles of others as if he suffered equally with them; he must care and provide for all; through humility he must be the equal of all well-doers; he must be stern with sinners, and through following chapters.

XIII. How the teacher is to be pure in heart.

The teacher must be ever pure in heart, that no impurity defile him when he undertakes the ministration, to enable him to wipe off the impurity of other men's hearts. It is needful for the hand to have been cleaned beforehand which is to wipe off the dirt from the other; if it is also dirty there is reason to expect that it will dirty the other worse if it touches it. Hence it was said through the prophet : "Purify yourselves, ye who bear God's vessels." They bear God's vessels who undertake the guidance of other men's souls in the faith of their own merits to the inmost sanctuary. Let those consider among themselves how pure they ought to be who carry in their breasts the ever-living vessels to the eternal temple on their own responsibility. Therefore it was commanded by the holy voice that an account of judgment was to be inscribed on Aaron's breast on the robe called rationale and bound with fillets, that the flood of thoughts might not overwhelm the priest's heart, but it was to be bound by that same account not to entertain foolish or useless thoughts. he is set as an example for other men, he must always show in the consistency of his life how much prudence he cherishes in his heart. On the same robe which he wore on his breast were also written the names of the twelve patriarchs. The priest bears the names of the fathers written very blamelessly on his breast when he is ever mindful of the example of their life. The priest advances very blamelessly on the path by zealously and incessantly contemplating the example of the departed Fathers, and ever striving to follow in the tracks of the saints, and suppressing unlawful thoughts lest he cross the threshold of his authority. Very rightly the priest's robe is called the account of judgment, because the priest was bound and still is ever to consider how he can discern good and evil, and then to consider carefully how and when he is to teach each one, and what is most profitable for them, and not desire to appropriate anything to himself only, but reckon the prosperity of his neighbours as his own. About which it is written that on the robe which Aaron wore on his breast when he entered before God were to be written the instruction, judgments, and truth. He ever bore on his breast before God the judgments of the children of Israel. Thus the priest must still always bear the judgments of the children of Israel written on his breast, that is, that he must zealously serve the interests of those under his care solely from his awe of the inner Judge, that no human flattery be mingled therewith through friendship, for he is placed there to serve as an example and type of Christ.

And yet his zeal in correcting must not be too excessive, nor his severity in punishing, but whilst showing himself zealous against the faults of others, let him fear his own, lest secret malice or over-hasty anger corrupt the calmness of judgment. And if he consider the terror of the Judge who sits over all, he will not correct his subjects without great fear. But fear humbles and purifies the spirit, lest the boldness of his heart puff him up too much, or the pleasures of the flesh corrupt him, or through desire of earthly things the perverse habit of wantonness obscure the mind, which often disturbs the ruler's mind. But it is very necessary to withstand it at once, lest the sin which assails him with temptations through his desire and weakness of mind overcome him; for if it is not quickly driven away, he will be slain with the sword of consent.

XIV. How the teacher is to be foremost in his works.

The teacher must be lofty in his works, to show in his own life the way of life to his disciples, that the flock which follows the words and moral example of the shepherd may rather follow his example than his words. His position obliges him to speak eloquently; let him then consider that it is equally needful for him, when he has spoken, to act according to his teaching, for the voice of the teacher penetrates the heart of the hearer much the more easily if he fix it there with good examples; that is, that he is to display openly what he commands with his words, to help it to become effective. Of which was said through the prophet: "If thou wishest to preach to Zion, ascend a lofty mountain." That is, that he who desires to enjoy divine things and heavenly instruction must forsake low and earthly works, since he is seen standing on the roof of divine things. He can the more easily improve his disciples, and the better he will be heard, the higher he stands in his life's merits. Therefore the holy law commands the priest to receive the right shoulder of the offering, which is to be separated from the rest of the carcass. This signifies that the works of the priest are to be separated from those of other men, not only by his doing good among men, but also specially by his excelling as much in good works and virtue as in rank. He was also to have the breast of the beast as

Nor let him desire anything earthly beyond that, nor be influenced by any earthly fear of this present life, but consider the inner fear of God, and despise all worldly flattery and fears for the pleasant sweetness of God. Therefore it was commanded in the law by the sublime voice that the priest was to be clothed on both shoulders with the close-fitting surplice. In other words, he is to be always strengthened and provided against all dangers, both spiritual and human, and protected against all pleasures with this cloak of strength, as Paul said: "Go on your way armed on the

That when he aspires to divine things alone he may not deviate on either side after any foul and sinful lusts, nor become inflated with pride and luxury, nor be troubled by adversity, nor be allured and subjected by any flattery, nor be reduced to despair by disappointment. If then none of these are able to shake his resolution, it is clear that he is very becomingly attired on both shoulders with a very beautiful dress. The dress was commanded to be made of purple and double-dyed scarlet and twice-spun linen cloth, adorned with gold and the gem jacinth, to show with how various and manifold virtues the priest was to shine before God as an example to men. First and foremost among all the ornaments gold was to shine on his robe. That is, that above all the knowledge of wisdom was to shine in his mind. After the gold, above all the gem jacinth was to be on his robe, which is most like the sky in colour, signifying that whatever the mind of the priest penetrates, it must be for the sake of divine love and not of idle vaunt, lest heavenly understanding fail him when he is ensnared by the desire of his own praise. Besides the gold and linen there was purple, which is a royal vestment, since it is the sign of royal authority. By which let the priest remember, when he loftily teaches other men, loftily to destroy his vicious desires, since he has a royal robe, that he may also be king over his own faults and royally vanquish them; and whether he be noble or of low birth, let him ever consider the nobility of regeneration, which is in baptism, and ever show in his morals the promises he made on that occasion to God, and the virtues which were then inculcated on him. Of spiritual nobility Peter spoke: "Ye are a race chosen for God of royal priesthood." As to the power with which we can correct our vices, we can be strengthened by the words of the evangelist John: "To those who received him he gave power of being God's children." The excellence of this strength the Psalmist acknowledged when he said, "Lord, greatly are thy friends in honour with me, and their power is greatly strengthened; for the heart of thy saints is exalted very loftily and mightily to thee, when to

On the priest's dress, besides gold and jacinth and purple, there was twice-dyed scarlet, signifying that all his good deeds and virtues are to be adorned with the love of God and men before the eyes of the eternal Judge, that the spark of good works which twinkles before men may burn with the vigorous flame of inner love before the unseen Judge. The love which includes both God and one's neighbours shines very beautifully with two colours like the twice-dyed cloth. on the other hand, is always so intent on the care of his neighbours as to neglect the divine love, has omitted the double-dyed purple, which he ought to have on the holy vestment, if he forsake either of these two. And when the mind is exalted with the love of God and its neighbours, there is nothing wanting but abstinence, with which he must mortify and starve the flesh. Therefore, besides the twice-dyed cloth, there is to be on the surplice twice-spun linen. Flax comes from the earth and is of a white colour. What can be signified by the flax but bodily purity, which must shine from a pure heart? The woven linen is fastened to the beautiful surplice because purity attains resplendent beauty when the flesh is mortified by abstinence,

Let the teacher be moderate and discreet and useful in his words, lest he keep unsaid what is useful to speak, or speak what ought to be kept silent. For as unguarded and careless speaking leads men astray, so the excessive silence of the teacher leads into error those whom he might teach if he were willing to speak. Often also un-

The same fault the Lord rebuked through the prophet, saying: "Dumb desires are evil, through love of righteousness. Of which was again spoken to the guilty people : "Your prophets prophesied to you folly and falsehood, and would not proclaim to you your unrighteousness to bring you to repentance." Good teachers are often called prophets in holy writ, for they proclaim that this present life is fleeting, and reveal the future. Those whom the divine voice blamed, and said that they would prophesy untruth, are they who fear to reproach men with their sins, but gently soothe them with promises of security, and are quite unwilling to show sinners their wickedness, but suppress their admonitions. The word of admonition is a key, for it often unlocks and opens the sin which he who committed it was not aware of. Of which Paul said that the teacher should be mighty to exhort to salutary doctrine, and also to reprove those who oppose him. Again it was said through Zachariah: "The law must be sought in the mouth of the priest, and his lips contain understanding, for he is God's messenger to the people." Therefore the Lord admonished through the prophet Isaiah, saying: "Cry aloud and cease not, raise thy voice like a trumpet." For he who undertakes the priesthood undertakes the office of herald and footmen who run before kings, loudly proclaiming their journey and will. Thus priests ought to run and proclaim loudly before the awful Judge, who follows them in great majesty. But if the teacher is unskilled in instruction, what avails his cry? What more can he proclaim than the dumb herald? Therefore the Holy Ghost in the shape of tongues settled on the apostles, for without doubt whomsoever he fills he readily causes to speak about him. Therefore it was enjoined on Moses that the priest was to be hung around with bells; in other words, he was to have the voice of instruction, lest with silence he offend against the will of the Spectator. It is written, that whether he went in or out before God to the sanctuary, his sound was to be heard, lest he died. It is said that the priest was to die unless the sound was heard from him both entering and coming out, because he compels the unseen Judge to anger if he enters without the sound of instruction. It is written that the robe of the priest was to be hung with bells. What signifies the priestly robe but good deeds? The prophet David showed it when he said: "Let thy priests be clad with righteousness." Bells hung on the priestly robe, which means that the works of the priest and his voice are to proclaim the way of life. But when the teacher is ready to speak, let him be careful to speak warily ; for if he hastens on irregularly with his speech that he may seem the more wise, it is probable that he will wound the hearts of his hearers by leading them into error and foolishly increasing the frivolity which he ought to prune away. Of which Truth spoke : "Have salt in you and peace among you." Salt signifies the words of wisdom. He therefore who hastens to speak wisely ought to fear greatly, lest his speech disturb the confidence of the hearers.

 Of which Paul spoke : "Desire not to know more than is needful for you, but know what is fitting for you to know and what ye are capable of knowing." Of which was said by the divine voice that bells were to hang on the priest's robe, and among the bells red apples. What signify the red apples but the constancy of righteous belief? As the apple is covered with a single skin, and yet has many pips inside it, so the holy Church encloses a multitude of people with one faith, and yet they who dwell therein have very different merits. Therefore let the teacher consider lest he incautiously hurry on with his speech. About that which we have treated above Truth itself spoke to the apostles: "Have salt in you and peace among you." It was said as an illustration that there were to be the red apples on the priest's robe among the bells. That is, that through all that we have said above the constancy of divine belief is to be received and carefully held. The teacher must consider beforehand with careful meditation not only how he is to avoid himself preaching bad doctrine, but also how he is not to preach what is right too excessively or too immoderately or too severely; for often the virtue of doctrine is lost when the heart and understanding of the hearers are led into error with unseemly and imprudent loquacity, and the teacher also is disgraced by his loquacity, when he cannot think how he may most usefully teach those who wish to hear it. Of which was very well said through Moses, that the man who suffered overflow of his seed and discharged it to no purpose, was to be unclean. Thus also the words of instruction are seed, and they fall on the heart of the hearer, whether they be profitable or not. The words are received by the ears and brought forth in the mind by the understanding. Therefore the noble teacher Paul was called by learned men word-sower. He who suffers overflow of his seed is accounted unclean, so also he who is loquacious is not a whit the less defiled therewith. But if he brings forth his speech seasonably, he can beget therewith the progeny of righteous thoughts in the listeners' heart. But if the instruction is carelessly spilt by loquacity, the seed is discharged to no purpose, not for any procreation of progeny but for uncleanness and indecency. Of which Paul spoke when he admonished his servant to stand firm in doctrine, he said: "I command thee before God and the Saviour Christ, who is to judge the living and dead, and I charge thee yet he said before seasonably, because excessive argument injures the unwise who cannot understand it, and makes the discourse useless to the hearers, when unseasonable interference cannot set it right again.

XVI. How the teacher is to be sympathizing with and solicitous

Therefore Paul, though he was taken to Paradise and enumerated the mysteries of the third heaven, and although by the contemplation of unseen things he was exalted in the sharpness of his mind, yet he deigned to direct it to carnal bedchambers, and ordained how men were to arrange it therein, saying: "Let each man have his wife, and each woman her husband; and let the woman do with the man what is lawful, and he with her

And shortly after he said: "Defraud not one another, unless ye abstain for some time before the day of prayers and sacrifices, and return forthwith to your lawful intercourse." Behold, now, how the holy man who was so familiar with the secrets of heaven applied himself to the consideration of what was proper for carnal men to do in their chambers and beds; and although he was so exalted to the unseen, yet he directed his mind's eye and through humanity turned his attention to secrets of weak men. He traversed heaven with the contemplation of his mind, and yet neglected not the consideration of carnal intercourse; for he connected through the love of God and men both the highest and the lowest things. In his own person he was greatly exalted with the power of the Holy Ghost, and yet his piety made him equally solicitous about earthly men in their need. Therefore he said: "Who is weak and I am not weak; or who is shamed and I am not ashamed?" Again, he said on the same subject: "When I was among the Jews I was like them." He did not say so because he wished to forsake his honour and faith, as they did, but he wished to show his piety by pretending to be an unbeliever, and learnt to be merciful to other men by thinking how he would desire mercy if he were such as they. And again he said: "If we now exalt our thoughts beyond measure, it is for the sake of God; if we moderate them again, it is for your sake."

He perceived that he surpassed himself in the contemplation of godliness, and he knew how to let himself down again to the level of his disciples. Therefore Jacob the patriarch anointed the stone which lay at his head, to show that he would afterwards tithe his inheritance there, because of the vision he saw in sleep when he slept at the stone.
 He saw a ladder standing near him on the earth. The other end was up in heaven, and at the upper end the Lord reclined, and angels climbed up and down the ladder. For good teachers gazing upwards desire not only to seek and contemplate the holy Head of the holy Church, which is God, but also from humanity to descend to his members. Therefore Moses often went in and out of the temple, because in it he was led to divine contemplation, and outside he occupied himself with the people's wants. In it he contemplated in his mind the mysteries of godliness, and brought them out thence to the people, and proclaimed what they were to do and observe. And whenever he was in doubt he ran back into the temple and asked God about it before the ark, in which was the covenant of the temple, thus setting an example to those who are now rulers. When they are uncertain about anything which they are to do outside, they must return to their mind, and there ask God, as Moses did before the ark in the temple. If they still doubt there, let them go to the holy Scriptures, and ask there what they are to do or teach. For Truth itself, that is Christ, when on earth prayed on mountains and in retired places, and performed his miracles in cities, thus preparing the path of imitation for good teachers, lest they despise the company of weak and sinful men, though they themselves aspire to the highest. Because when love descends through humanity and is occupied with the need of his neighbours, it rises marvellously; and the more cheerfully it descends, the easier it ascends, signifying that those who are set above others are to let themselves be seen, that their subjects may not through shame fear confessing to them their secrets, that when the sinful are overwhelmed with the waves of temptation, they may hasten to take refuge in the heart of the teacher for confession like a child in its mother's bosom, and wash away the sins wherewith they think themselves polluted, with his help and counsel, and become purer than they were before confession, washed in the tears of their prayers. Therefore also there stood before the temple a brazen basin, supported by twelve brazen oxen, that those who wished to enter the temple might wash their hands in the sea. The basin was big enough to cover the oxen entirely, except the projecting heads. What signify the twelve oxen but the twelve apostles and the whole succession of bishops which come after them? Of which was spoken in the law : "Bind not the mouth of the thirsting oxen." This saying Paul applied again to those bishops whose public works we see, while we know not what their thoughts are before the severe Judge with his hidden requital. When they descend to wash the sins of their neighbours, when they confess, they support, as it were, the basin before the church door, as the oxen did before the temple; so that whoever inwardly desires to enter the gates of eternal life must confess every temptation which has assailed him to the mind of his confessor before the temple; and as men's hands and feet were under the old law washed in the basin before the temple, so let us now wash our mind's hands and our works with confession. It often happens also that when the confessor hears the temptations of him who confesses, he is himself assailed with the same temptations. The water in the basin was dirty when many hands and feet were washed in it. In the same way, when the sins of many are washed in the mind of the priest with his instruction, and he receives

let him consider the authority of his office ; and again, with those who lead a good life, let him think so lightly of his authority as to place his subjects on an equality with himself, nor deem himself in any respect their superior ; and, again, with the perverse, let him not fear to practise his righteousness, as I remember once saying in the book entitled " Morales." I said that all men are born alike, but some are kept behind others by the difference in their merits, and their sins keep them there. The divine judgment is mindful of the difference caused by their moral defects, and that all men cannot be equal, and always wishes them to be raised one above another. Therefore all those who are to be above others must not think too much or too often of their authority, but of how like they naturally are to other men ; nor think so much of how they are to gain authority over others, as how they can be most useful to them. It is said that our ancestors were shepherds. And the Lord said also to Noah and his children : " Grow and multiply, and fill the earth, and your fear and terror shall be over all the beasts of the earth." He did not say over other men, but over animals, since he was forbidden to have power over men, but was allowed to have it over animals. Man is by nature superior to irrational animals, but not to other men. Therefore it was not said that other men should fear him, but not animals. Therefore it is unnatural presumption for a man to wish to be feared by his equals, and yet it is necessary for a man to fear his lord, and Therefore when teachers perceive that their ſubjects fear God too little, it is neceſſary to make them at any rate fear human authority, that they may fear to ſin, though they do not dread the divine judgment. Nor do the rulers become proud, although they deſire to excite terror on account of ſuch as theſe, becauſe they do not therein ſeek their own glory, but deſire the righteousneſſe of their ſubjects, and wiſh to be feared by thoſe who lead a corrupt life ; and over ſuch they are to rule, not as over men, but as over beaſts, becauſe to a certain extent they reſemble wild animals, and therefore muſt lie proſtrate in terror, ſubjected to other men like animals. But he despises his subjects, and does not perceive that they are his equals in birth and virtue, but thinks he has surpassed them in the merits of his life as he has in the acquisition of authority, and thinks he is as much their superior in knowledge as he is in power. And so he extols himself so loftily in some respects, and yet is bound to other men by being of the same kind, although he disdains to regard them. But thus he himself is made similar to him of whom it is written that "he beholds all pride who is king of all the children of pride." Who desired a separate sovereignty, and despised the fellowship and way of life of the other angels, saying: "I will build my seat in the north, and be like the highest." And then by a wondrous judgment he obtained through his own presumption the abyss into which he was cast, when he exalted himself in imagination to such a height of power. Without doubt when a man is impatient of being like other men he resembles the perverse and banished devil. As Saul, king of Israel, through humility obtained sovereignty, and became proud because of the dignity of power. Through humility he was raised above others, and through pride he was rejected. God showed it when he said: "When thou didst seem despicable in thine own eyes I made thee chief of all Israel." As first he himself thought that he was incompetent, but when he was supported by transitory authority, he considered himself far from despicable and quite competent. Therefore he exalted himself above the companionship of other men, and made himself so different from other men. Perceiving that he had more power than any other man, he thought he was also greater. It was a wondrous dispensation that when he deemed himself little, he was great in the eyes of God, and when he deemed himself great, he was in the eyes of God little. Thus often when the mind is swelled with pride, because of the multitude of people subject to it, it is polluted with the height of its authority. He is well able to wield authority who knows both how to hold and resist it. He wields it well who knows when to exercise the requisite severity and authority against the wicked and sinful, and impartiality towards other men, and does not exalt himself above them. But the human heart is often puffed up without being supported by any authority; and consider how much more so if distinction and power were added! And yet he wields authority very rightly who well knows how to gather from it that which is beneficial for him, and oppose what is hurtful, and understand himself, and see that he is like other men, and yet exalt himself above the sinful with zeal and severity. We shall be able more fully to understand and sift the argument, if we consider the example of the first shepherd, St. Peter. By the gift of God he received the rule of the holy Church, and yet rejected the excessive adulation of men. When Cornelius out of humility did right in prostrating himself before him, he nevertheless acknowledged himself to be his equal, and said: "Arise, do not so; what, am I not a man as thou art?" But when he perceived the sin of Ananias and Sapphira he soon showed how great his authority was over others, when he perceived their course of life by the meditation of the Holy Ghost, and smote him with his word, and by his power showed that he was chief of the holy Church and most severe against sins. He did not acknowledge his power and authority in the case of Cornelius, when he wished to honour him so excessively; he wished to impart to him his humility, and so he earned the reputation of being his equal. He told him he was his equal, and thus showed his humility; and, on the other hand, he showed his zeal and authority in the punishment of Ananias and Sapphira. And again, St. Paul acknowledged that he was not better than other good men, when he said: "We are not rulers of your belief, but helpers of your joy, because ye

Again, he spoke as if he knew not that he was exalted above the rest of the brothers, when he said : "We have become as it were little children among you." And again he said : "We are your servants for the love of Christ." But when he discovered the sin which he had to punish, he soon showed that he was master and lord. He showed it when he said in his Epistle to the Galatians : "Do ye wish me to come to you with a rod, or with gentleness of spirit?" As if he had said : "Shall I come with fear or with love?" The government is well administered when he who rules desires rather to rule over human vices than over other good men. But when rulers chide the sinful it is very necessary for them to consider carefully how with the instruction and awe which they are bound to employ they may correct sins with their authority. And yet, lest he lose his humility, let him consider that he is himself very similar to those very men he chides and humbles ; and also we can silently think in our heart, without saying it aloud, that they are better than we, and worthy of being promoted by us, although we are appointed to reprove them, and their sins are to be corrected by us with power and doctrine. But, on the other hand, when we ourselves sin, no one chastises or even blames us with a single word. Therefore our responsibility with God is the greater in proportion to the security and impunity with which we sin among men without any punishment. But when we teach and reprove our subjects, the more severely we punish their sins in this world, the greater will be their freedom after the divine judgment ; and yet humility must ever be preserved in the heart and taught in practice ; and between the two we must avoid carrying humility too far, lest the influence of authority be weakened, and take care to honour our subjects in such a way as to be able to command their reverence again. The authority and power which the ruler receives for the benefit of many he must exhibit outwardly, and preserve humility internally. Let him consider himself in his heart to be such as he would wish not to be. Even if it is shown on any occasion that he is able to perform some good and admirable deed, let him make his subjects understand that he is humble in spirit that they may imitate it, and by his authority understand that they have cause to fear him. Let those who are above others be very careful that the greater their visible authority over others the more they be inwardly subdued by humility, lest his imagination overcome him and lead his mind to the desire of some vice so that he cannot subject it to his will, because he formerly had made his own will subservient to his vices, and allowed it to rule over him with authority, lest the troubled mind through the intoxication of authority be led to pride. Of which was very rightly spoken by a wise man, who said to some one else : "Thou art made ruler, yet be not too proud, but be like one of thy subjects." St. Peter, again, said on the same subject : "We are no rulers of this people, but we are set as an example to our flock." Again, on the same subject, Truth, that is Christ, himself said, when he incited us to the highest virtues: "Know that kings of nations are rulers of the people, and they who exercise authority are called lords; let it not be so among you, but whoever among you desires to be first, shall be your servant, and whoever wishes to be greatest among you, shall be your slave." "As the Son of Man," said Christ of himself, "did not come on earth to be served but to serve." Hence we are also told in the gospel what punishment the proud servant would suffer after obtaining power; he said then: "The wicked slave says in his heart: 'My master is long of coming; I can beat and abuse my companions.' So he eats and drinks with drunkards, and neglects his lord's commands. And his lord comes on the day he expects not tending to desire ministration in order to teach morality and discipline, and, when he has it, desiring to have it for his own aggrandise-ment, and habituating himself to authority. Yet the rulers often err as much in being too humble with the wicked man, and putting himself too much on an equality with him, and affecting familiarity rather than authority. He is very rightly accounted a hypocrite who, while seeming to teach, perverts the ministration of authority to temporal supremacy, and causes the reverence of himself and his power to become the regular habit of the country he rules. And yet sometimes they sin still more by making themselves companions and equals of the wicked and unrighteous rather than exercising their authority. Thus did Eli the priest. He was overcome with false humanity so as not to punish his own sons when they sinned, but before the severe Judge he slew both his sons and himself by allowing their sins to pass unpunished. It was as if the divine voice had said to him : "Thou honourest thy sons more than me." And, again, shepherds were blamed through the prophet, when he said : "Ye did not bind up the broken leg of the sheep, nor did ye seek that which was lost, and bring it home." He brings home the lost one who, with the zeal of pastoral care, brings back and raises up him who falls into sin, so that he stands in righteousness. The broken leg is bound with a bandage; in the same way sins are bound with instruction. As the wound is sure to swell unless bound with a bandage, so will sins increase and spread unless sometimes bound with rigorous discipline. And yet the wound is often aggravated and increased if carelessly bound, and the wound is more painful if bound too tightly. So it is also necessary for the teacher, who is the soul's physician, while curing the wounds of the sins of his subjects, to bind them moderately, and yet to exercise the righteousness of instruction towards the guilty so carefully as not to neglect humanity. And he must also be careful to prove to his subjects that he is their father and ruler in instruction, and their mother in humanity, lest he be too severe in instruction and too remiss in humanity. As we have said before in the book of morals, speaking of Job, that both humanity and severity were separately useless unless combined. Therefore the ruler ought to have a righteous and loving care of his subjects, and severity tempered with mercy. Therefore Truth itself, which is Christ, spoke when he taught by the Samaritan's care of the wounded man, who was carried half alive into the inn, and wine and oil were ordered to be poured into his wound. Wine irritates a wound, and oil softens and heals it. He who desires to heal a wound must pour in wine, that the harshness of the wine may penetrate and cleanse the corrupted wound, and afterwards oil, to soften and heal it. So also the teacher is to mingle gentleness and severity, that he may attain moderation by combining the two, lest with excessive ferocity he irritate and increase overmuch his subjects' wounds, or, on the other hand, out of excessive mildness, leave them unbound. This is well illustrated by the ark in the old law. In it were kept the stone tablets on which the law was written in ten commandments, and with the tablets the rod and the sweet food they called manna which came to them from heaven. So also, if the understanding of the holy writings is in the breast of the good ruler, there must be a rod, signifying that he is to correct his subjects, and sweetness of manna in his breast, showing that he is to be gentle with them. Of this same David spoke to God: "Thy rod and staff have comforted me." We are beaten with rods and supported by staves. If there is a rod to beat with, let there

Many, however, will not consider that they are set over other brothers to superintend them in divine things ; but with the desire of their entire heart exercise worldly care, and rejoice that they have it to exercise ; and when they have it not, they strive day and night to obtain it, and are greatly grieved in spirit when they are without that which they would like to have. seems to him a hardship to be without worldly troubles. And so it happens, when he rejoices in being occupied with worldly matters, that he knows not how to teach the divine things which he ought when they wish to live spiritually, through the evil example set by their superior. Then they become rebellious, and thus are led astray.

 As when the head is unsound all the members are useless, even if they are sound, and as the army which is ready to attack another nation is useless if the general goes wrong; so also when the bishop is engaged in the ministrations which properly belong to earthly judges, no one incites or encourages the minds of the subjects to herd is useless who ought to watch over the flock. Therefore the subjects cannot obtain the light of truth, because the desire of earthly things occupies the understanding and blinds the mind's eyes of the people with temptation, as dust does the eyes of the body in summer in a high wind. Therefore the Redeemer of mankind spoke very rightly dissuading us from gluttony: "Beware dulling your hearts with gluttony and drunkenness and manifold worldly cares." He also added fear when he said: "Lest the terrible day of judgment come on you." He showed what was to be the coming of this day when he said: "It shall come as a snare on all dwellers on the earth." And again he said: "No man can obey two masters." this world, and charged them very straitly when he said: "Let no servant of God be too much engaged in worldly matters, lest he offend him to whom he formerly rendered himself." When he directed that the servants of the Church were to have quietness in their ministra-tions, he also directed that they were to keep themselves free from other occupations; he said: "If ye have to deliver judgment in worldly things, take those who are least esteemed in the household, and appoint them judges, that they may rule and arrange about earthly things who are not so greatly honoured with divine gifts." As if he had openly said: "Make them useful in the one pursuit if they cannot be so in the other." Therefore Moses, who was in such honour with God that

although he was a heathen and foreigner, who said that he occupied himself foolishly with the earthly service of the people, and advised him to appoint others to decide for him the differences among the people, that he might have the more leisure to understand secret and spiritual matters, so as to be able to teach the people more wisely and prudently; because lords and rulers ought to meditate on the loftiest subjects, and the subjects discharge humbler duties. The rulers ought to be before the people as a man's eye before his body, to see his path and steps. So it is necessary that the eye of the ruler be not obscured by the dust of earthly cares, because all those in authority are heads of the subjects, and the head has to guide the feet and make them step in the right path; the head above must take care not to let the feet slip in their course, for, if the feet fail, the whole body is inclined, and the head comes to the ground. How, then, can the bishop properly enjoy the pastoral dignity, if he is himself engaged in those earthly occupations which he ought to blame in others? Therefore God justly requited them by reproving them through the prophet when he said: "As the people are, such is the priest." The priest is the same as the people, when he does the same as they do, and has the same aspirations as they. Jeremiah the prophet perceived it, when he wept very sorely, and spoke as if the temple were altogether destroyed; he said: "Alas, why is the gold dimmed, and why is the noblest colour changed? The stones of the temple are scattered, and lie at the end of every street." What signifies the gold, which is so signifies the noble colour but the reverence of piety, which is to be loved by all? What signify also the stones of the holy edifice but the office of holy ordination? What also signifies the wide street but the wide road of this present life? Of the wide road Truth, that is Christ himself, spoke: "It is a very spacious and wide road which leads to destruction." The gold is blackened when the sanctity of a man's life is stained with earthly works. The noblest hue is changed when the possession of the good deeds he formerly accomplished is diminished, since he was formerly thought to live virtuously. When any one, after obtaining the holy office, is busily engaged in earthly works, it is as if the fair hue of the gold were changed and it were dulled and despised

The gems of the sanctuaries lie scattered along the streets when the men, who ought to keep themselves unoccupied for the adornment of the church in the secret ministrations of the temple, desire the wide roads of this world outside. For the gems of the sanctuaries were made in order to shine on the robe of the highest priest among the holiest holinesses. But when the priests do not incite their subjects to virtue and reverence of our Redeemer with the merits of their life, their gems of the holiest holinesses are not in the ornaments of the bishop's robe, but lie scattered up and down the streets, when the offices of holy ordination are left to the wide roads of their own desires and are tied to earthly occupations. We must also know that he did not say that the gens were scattered along the streets, but at the ends of the streets; because although they live in a worldly manner they desire to be considered the best, and, although they go in the wide road of their own will and desires, they wish to be considered the best and holiest. And yet, in cases of need, earthly occupations are sometimes to be tolerated, yet never to be loved too much, lest they oppress the mind of the man who loves them too much, so that he is oppressed and overcome with the burden, and depressed from the highest to the lowest. Yet many undertake ministration, divine works, and would not concern themselves at all with earthly things. These, when they entirely neglect the care of worldly things, do not at all help their subjects in their need. Therefore their instruction is often despised when they blame and hate the faults of their subjects, and do them no other good in this world; for the word of instruction cannot penetrate the heart of the poor man unless he be encouraged with kindness. But the seed of words grows very well when the humanity of the teacher softens and moistens the breast of the hearer. Therefore it is necessary for the ruler to be able and know how to irrigate and water the minds of others, and also to provide for their outer wants. The pastors are to be fervidly zealous about the inner wants of their subjects, without neglecting the care of their outer wants. The spirit of the subjects is necessarily broken if the teacher and shepherd neglect helping them outwardly. About which the first shepherd, St. Peter, earnestly admonished us, and said: "I, your fellow-servant and witness of Christ's suffering, entreat you to feed God's flock which is under your care." Soon after he showed whether he meant food of the mind or of the body, when he said: "Without compulsion, of your own freewill, ye must provide for your flock for the love of God, not for base gain." With these words he fully warned and taught us, lest, after replenishing and bettering the wants of their subjects, they themselves should be slain with the sword of avarice, lest, while their neighbours are refreshed and aided by them, they themselves abstain from the bread of righteousness. This same zeal of the shepherds St. Paul aroused, saying: "He who cares not for those that are his, and especially God's, servants, is an apostate and infidel." Yet, with all this, it is always to be feared and due care taken, lest, while they are to perform outer duties, they be not estranged from inner contemplation; because the minds of rulers, as we have remarked above, when occupied with these transitory things and inconsiderately devoted to them, often let the inner love grow cold, and are not afraid of forgetting that they have received the control of men's souls. But it is necessary that their solicitude about the outer wants of their subjects be kept within due bounds. Concerning which it was well said to the prophet, Ezekiel that the priests were not to shave their heads with razors, nor, on the other hand, let their locks grow, but clip them with scissors. Priests are very properly called sacerds, that is in English "cleansers," because they are to act as guides of believers and govern them. The hair on their head signifies outer thoughts, for it grows and flourishes over the brain and yet no one feels it; which signifies the cares of this present life. Our thoughts often proceed from us so carelessly that we no more feel it than a man can feel his hair above the skin, because we often meditate on improper subjects. Yet all those who are to be above others must be careful of outer things, and yet must not be too much hampered by them. The priest was with good reason forbidden his hieremonnum to nytte habban, ne eft he ne læte forweaxan to swiðe to unnytte & to unryhte. About which it was well said that the cutter was to cut his hair; in other words, that he is to be as zealous as is needful in the care of transitory things, and yet so as easily to be able to clip them without pain to prevent their growing too luxuriantly; lest, while the bodily life is protected, the thoughts of the heart be tied down through the excessive care of outer things; the priest must preserve his locks so as to cover the skin, and yet clip them before they fall into his eyes.

XIX. That the ruler is not to do his good works for vainglory only, but rather for the love of God.

Meanwhile, it is very necessary for the ruler to be zealously vigilant and careful, lest the desire of popularity overcome him, that, when he zealously studies inner and spiritual things in his mind, and is very careful of outer things, he may not desire to please his subjects rather than God ; lest, when he is supported with good works, and is regarded by worldly men as a stranger in this world, through the desire of his own glory and praise he become estranged from God. He is alto-works which God ought to have from the people. We know well that the servant who obtains a wife for his worldly master is guilty of adultery towards God, and altogether guilty towards his master if he wish her to love him, and himself to please her better than he who sent him and the money thither. When vanity seizes on the mind of the ruler, and he desires to please excessively, he often rushes into excessive flattery, and is sometimes too excessively smooth, sometimes too severe. The mind of the ruler is weakened when he sees that his subjects sin and yet he is unwilling to correct them, lest their love decrease and he be the less popular. But he is often too indulgent with the errors of his subjects which he ought to correct, since he dare not reprove them on account of the flattery. Of which was very well spoken through the prophet : "Woe to those who wish to lay a pillow under each elbow and a bolster under each neck to catch men with." He lays a pillow under every man's elbow who with soft flatteries wishes to doctor those who sink into the love of this world, until they fall from their righteousness. The elbow is supported with a pillow and the neck with a bolster when the sinful man is not sternly rebuked. When he is not humbled with any severity or contradiction, he is suffered through the gentle flattery to rest very softly in his own folly. But the rulers who desire their own glory grant such indulgences to those who they fear may stand in the way of their glory and diminish their worldly honour. But those who they think cannot do them harm or oppose them, they severely rebuke and entirely crush ; and never care to admonish them mildly, but forget the pastoral love, and terrify and threaten them with authority like lords. These were very rightly reprov'd through the prophet by the divine voice when he said: "Ye commanded very severely and imperiously." This is said of those who love themselves and their own dignity more than that of their Lord. They exalt themselves above their subjects, and always think of what they can, not of what they ought to do, and do not fear the judgment which follows; but most shamelessly boast of their temporary authority, and take delight in doing what is unlawful as it were lawfully, and none of their subjects opposes them. But he who wishes to do wrong, and yet hopes that other men will keep silent about it, is his own witness that he desires men to love himself more than righteousness. For there is no man who can altogether live so as never to sin. He desires men to love truth more than himself who desires no man to hesitate doing well on his account. Therefore St. Peter very cheerfully accepted the reproof of St. Paul; and, again, king David very humbly accepted the reproof of his own servant, the prophet Nathan. Therefore also good rulers, while they do not care whether men love themselves specially and excessively, think, although their subjects rightly praise them for their own merits, that they do so out of affection and humility, not because of their deserts. It is very necessary for us to regulate our authority with such art that, when the mind of our subjects is able to grasp any righteous idea, it may be encouraged with the freedom it has, without inclining to egotism and pride, when his master gives him too great licence of speech, that he may not on that account forget or lose his humility. And yet it is right for good rulers to desire to please, in order that through their popularity they may make their Lord please the people, and through the estimation in which they themselves are held, they may draw their neighbours to the love of truth; not merely because they desire to be specially loved, but as if the love of themselves were a road by which they may lead the hearts which are willing to hear them to the love of our Creator.

 For it is very difficult for a man willingly to listen to the teacher whom he does not love. Therefore he who is to be above others must try to please in order that he may be heard, and yet he must not seek popularity for himself, lest he be convicted of being in his heart the enemy of him whose servant he is seen to be in his ministration. This was very well expounded by St. Paul when he showed to us his secret zeal, saying: "As I wish in all things to please men." Yet, on the other hand, he soon said: "If I please men, I am not God's servant." So Paul both pleased and did not please, for in what he wished to please it was not himself, although he said so, but through himself he wished truth to please men.

XX. That the ruler must know well that vices often deceive, and pretend to be virtues.

The ruler must also know well that vices often seem to be virtues and good qualities through deceit. Many a man fasts much, and has the reputation of doing it for abstinence, but does it, however, for niggardliness and avarice. Many a one is lavish of his property, wishing to gain the reputation of generosity, and men think he does it for virtue; and it is, however, done rather for vanity than for charity. Often also excessive forgiveness seems to men to be humanity. And often, also, immoderate anger seems to men to be righteous indignation. A man is often very hasty, and rushes very senselessly and rashly into all his actions, and yet men think that it is from readiness and alacrity. A man is often very hesitating in every action, and very slow, and men think it is from stupidity and cowardice, and yet it is from wisdom and caution. Therefore it is indispensable for the ruler to be able well to distinguish between virtues and vices; lest the miser and the covetous rejoice in the reputation of being provident in what he ought to keep or give away; or, again, lest the ostentatious and the squanderer, because of the waste of his property boast, and think himself virtuous and benevolent; or, again, lest the assentator, who is ready to pass over what he ought to punish, bring his subjects to eternal punishments; or, again, lest he who punishes sins excessively himself sin worse thereby; or, again, when he has anything to punish rightly and severely, lest he delay, so that his righteous indignation become cold, and he cannot afterwards so easily punish it, that the sinful man be not let off too easily, lest he lose the reward of the good work which he ought to have merited with correction.

XXI. How discreet the ruler must be in reproving and flattering, and also in his zeal and gentleness.

It is also good to know that he ought sometimes cautiously to conceal the sins of his subjects, and pretend not to know it; sometimes, again, to tell it, sometimes, although it is well known, it is to be tolerated; sometimes, again, to be investigated minutely and accurately; sometimes to be blamed gently; sometimes to be corrected vigorously and severely. There are many, as we have remarked above, whom we must cautiously allow to dissimulate; and yet let it afterwards be known, that they may understand that men blame them, and endure it with humility, and so narrowly contemplate in their own mind the sins which they secretly suffer in themselves, and in themselves judge and punish and feel ashamed of them, that they may not do so again. Then he is himself acquitted towards himself with his own shame and patience, and also with his ruler's. God reproveth the Jews very well about this delay, when he spoke through the prophet: "Ye are liars: ye remembered me not, nor did ye think in your heart that I kept silence, as if I saw it not." He delayed, therefore, and tolerated the sins, but yet exposed it to them; although he kept silence with the sinners, he yet silently told them of it. But many sins, although openly known, are to be tolerated, when it is not the right time to reform them properly.

 As when a physician doctors a wound at the wrong time, it corrupts and putrefies. Therefore unless he arrange the time of treatment it is evident that the physician loses his medical skill. But when the teacher delays, and watches for a suitable opportunity of reproving his subjects, it is evident that he bears in his patience the burden of their sins. Therefore it was very well spoken through the Psalmist; he said: "The sinful built on my back." He was annoyed at the sinful building on his back, as if he had openly said: "When I cannot reform and teach a man, it is as if I carried him on my back." But there are many hidden things to be considered narrowly, that the ruler may be able to infer from symptoms in the mind of his subjects all that lurks there hidden, and watch his opportunity of testing them thereby, that he may sometimes be able to infer much from little. Therefore it was very rightly said to the prophet Ezekiel: "Thou son of man, pierce the wall. When I had pierced the wall," continued the prophet, "he showed me a door inside the wall, and said to me, Go in, and see the shame and most wicked things which the men here do. So I went in, and saw there the images of all the reptiles and loathsome beasts; and all the idols of the people of Israel were painted on the wall." What could be signified by Ezekiel but the rulers, and by the wall but the hardheartedness of the subjects? What is the piercing of the wall but sharp and searching temptation of the mind, that with it he may pierce and open the wall, and soften the hard hearts? He said: "When I had pierced the wall, I saw a door." As if he had said: "When I had pierced the hardness of the heart with careful probing and questioning and reproof, I seemed to see an open door, through which I saw in him whom I was to teach all the innermost thoughts." Therefore it was very well said: "Go in, and see the wickedness and abominations which they do here." He goes in, as it were, and sees the abominations, when he infers from certain outward indications of facts or behaviour all that they internally think; and thus his understanding penetrates the heart of his subjects, so that all their unlawful thoughts are known to him.

Therefore it was also said : "So I went in, and saw the images of all reptiles and loathsome beasts." The reptiles signify earthly thoughts. For beasts are to a certain extent raised from the earth, and yet incline to the earth because they have to live by it. Creeping and crawling animals lie on the earth with their whole body. And beasts, although larger, are more raised from the earth, and yet, because of their greedy desires, they all look towards the earth. The reptiles inside the wall signify the thoughts which fluctuate in the human heart, which continually desire to wallow in earthly desires. The beasts which he saw inside the wall signify that when a man entertains any righteous and proper thought, he does not lie altogether on the earth like the reptiles, but is somewhat raised from the earth like the beasts; but, from the desire of worldly fame and cupidity, he is improperly inclined to earthly things, as the beast from greediness bends to the earth. There were also seen painted on the wall all the idols of the people of Israel, and also the cupidity which St. Paul said was the companion of idols and vanity. It is very rightly written that after the beasts the idols were painted, because, although very many are elevated from the earth with proper works, they lay themselves on the earth with improper desires of earthly things. Therefore it was very well said that it was painted, because, when a man meditates in his heart about any earthly thing, he, as it were, draws and paints it in his heart, and thus he dubiously and unfirmly paints the likeness of the thing he meditates on in his mind. It is also to be known that the wall is first pierced, and then a door is added. If then the door is thrown open, we can see if there is any shameful secret inside, as the prophet did. Thou canst see from afar, if the wall is pierced, but thou canst not see what is hidden inside unless thou open the door. So thou canst first infer some vice in a man from certain signs, what thou shalt expect, before he reveal it with words or deeds. When he reveals it with either of them, the door of unrighteousness is thrown open, so that thou canst openly see all the evil that therein lurks. And many of them are to be chided very gently, when they do not sin from evil will, but from imprudence, and unwittingly or involuntarily, or from instincts of the flesh, or from want of firmness, or timidity, or weakness of mind or body. Therefore it is very necessary that the chiding of such sins be tempered and regulated with great moderation, because we all, while we live in this mortal flesh, are subject to the weakness and frailty of our flesh. Let every man consider from his own circumstances how he will judge others, lest it be known that he is excited and inflamed with indignation at the vices of his subjects, and has forgotten himself. Therefore Paul admonished us very well, saying: "If any one be afflicted with any sins, ye who are spiritual instruct such ones with the spirit of humanity; contemplate yourselves, lest temptation assail you." ye see in others, consider what and who ye are, that ye may moderate your angry zeal, when ye fear in yourselves that which ye blame in others." And yet many are to be very severely blamed, when they are unwilling to perceive their sins, that they may be blamed by the teacher's mouth, and hear how great a burden of sins they have ;

 that when they wish to make too light of the evil they have done, they may fear the weight of the teacher's blame. It is the duty of the ruler with the voice of his instruction to display the glory of the lofty regions, and to show how many sécret temptations of the old foe lurk in this present life, and not to suffer too gently the sins of his subjects, but correct them with great zeal and severity, lest he be responsible

And soon after he said : "Besiege it, and build another fortress against it, and bring up a mound against it, and send armies against it, and batter the wall with rams." And, again, he directed him to protect himself by taking an iron frying-pan, and placing it between himself and the city for an iron wall. What does Ezekiel the prophet signify but teachers, to whom is said : "Take a tile, and lay it before thee, and draw on it the city of Jerusalem ?" Holy teachers take a tile, when they undertake the charge of teaching earthly men's hearts. They lay the tile, on which they were behold all the thoughts of their minds, and with zealous care instruct worldly hearts, and show them what the sight of exalted peace is, and how a man understands in vain the heavenly wonders of God, if he does not understand how many temptations of the crafty foe assail him. Very well he added these words : "Zealously beset the city, and arm yourselves against it." Holy teachers beset the tile, whereon is drawn the city of Jerusalem, when they show the human mind, which yet seeks exalted life, how many dangerous vices oppose and fight against it in this present life, and how every sin lies in wait for the flourishing man. And as the army was to be arrayed round

Jerusalem, so are the words of the priest to be arrayed round the mind of his subjects. And he is not only to proclaim to his subjects how sins fight against them, but he is also to show them with what arts they can withstand them. It was besides very rightly said to the prophet: "Construct a fortress round the city." The holy teacher constructs a fortress round the city of the mind, which he teaches the art of withstanding temptations, and tells him how, when a man's virtue and wisdom increase, his temptations also often increase in proportion to his excellence. About which was very rightly said: "Bring a mound against it, and beset it, and attack it with battering-rams." Every teacher brings a mound against the man's mind, when he shows him how the burden grows and oppresses. He also raises a camp against

Jerusalem, when he warns the righteous understanding of his subjects of the secret machinations of the cunning foe, which they are to expect. And also he brings battering-rams round the mind of his subjects, when he shows them with how sharp temptations we are outwardly surrounded on all sides, while the wall of our virtue is pierced with the sharp battering-rams of temptations. And yet, although the teacher preach all this carefully and openly, it avails him nought, nor are his own sins pardoned any the more, unless he be inflamed with righteous zeal against the sins of his subjects. About which is further very rightly said to the prophet: "Take an iron frying-pan, and place it between thee and Jerusalem for an iron wall." By the pan is signified the fervour of the spirit, and by the iron the efficiency of reproof. What thing is there that is bitterer in the teacher's mind, or more fries and excites it, than the zeal which is roused in the cause of righteousness? With the frying of this pan Paul was inflamed, when he said: "Who is infirm, and I am not sick on his account? or who is shamed, and I am not ashamed?" And whoever is inflamed with divine zeal is not condemned through negligence, but is strongly fortified against it for ever. About which was very rightly said to the prophet: "Place an iron wall between thee and the city." He directed the prophet to place the iron frying-pan for an iron wall between himself and the city, because the rulers show such severe zeal now, since they wish to have it afterwards in eternal life as an iron wall between themselves and their subjects, to show that they did not approve of it, although they could not reform it. But when the ruler's spirit is too severe in reproof, something sometimes breaks forth which he ought to keep silent. And it also often happens that, when he reproves his subjects too severely, his words become perverted to useless loquacity. When the reproof is excessive, the mind of the sinner is driven to despair. Therefore it is very necessary, when the severe ruler perceives that he has afflicted the minds of his subjects more than he ought, for him to repent at once, that through his repentance he may obtain from the Truth forgiveness of the sin he committed through his angry zeal. The same the Lord God illustrated for us through Moses, when he said: "If any one go innocently with his friend to the forest to cut wood, and the

We go to the forest with our friends, whenever we observe the faults of our subjects; and we innocently hew wood, when we cut away the sins of the guilty with the instruction of pious thoughts. But the axe slips from the handle, and also out of our hands, when the instruction becomes severer than is necessary. The axe slips from the handle, when too severe words proceed from the reproof, with which one's friend is wounded or slain, when he is brought to sadness or despair by reproaches, although it is done out of love, to show his faults. soon turned to hatred, if pursued too much with more reproof than is necessary. But he who carelessly hews the wood, and so slays his friend, must flee to one of the three cities, that he may save himself in one of them, that he may live; that is, he is to turn to repentance, and so flee to one of the three cities, that is, hope, love, and faith. He who flees to one of the three cities need not be apprehensive about the homicide; even if the neighbours of the slain man meet him there, they will not kill him; because, when the severe and righteous Judge comes, who associated with us in the flesh, he will not exact punishment from him for the sin, because under his forgiveness he is protected by love, faith, and hope.

known that the outer occupation with worldly matters disturbs the mind of man, and drives it hither and thither, until he falls of his own will; but he must always collect himself and rise again by the study of the holy Scriptures. Therefore Paul admonished his servant Timothy, saying: "When I come, be thou occupied with reading." And again, David spoke about the same, saying: "Behold, Lord, how greatly I love thy law; the whole day it is my contemplation." Again, on the same subject, the Lord directed Moses how the ark was to be carried, saying: "Make four rings of pure gold, and fasten them very securely to the four corners of the ark; and order two poles to be made of the tree which is called sethim, and never rots, and surround them outside with gold; and push them through the rings at the side of the ark, to

What signifies the ark but the holy Church, on which are to hang the four rings at the four corners, that is, the four corners of this world, within which is spread God's people, which is surrounded outside by the four Gospels? The poles, with which the ark was to be carried, remained always inside the rings, to carry the ark with, and were made of the tree sethim, which never rots. So strong and vigorous teachers are to be sought, steadfast in the instruction of the holy books, who are always to proclaim the unanimity of the holy assembly, as the inserted poles bear the ark. The ark is carried by the poles when good teachers instruct the congregation, and lead the young and unbelieving spirits with their doctrine to righteous belief. The poles were to be cased in gold. That means that when the teachers instruct other men with their discourse, they are also themselves to shine brightly with their own works. It was very wisely directed that the poles were always to remain in the rings, and never be pulled out, because it is absolutely necessary that those who are appointed to the ministration of instruction never swerve from the desire of reading and learning the holy Scriptures. Therefore it was also directed that the gold-cased poles were always to remain in the golden rings, lest anything unexpected hindered the ark when it was to be carried. That is, when the subjects of the teachers seek anything spiritual from them, and question them, it is a great shame if he goes to seek what he is to give them, when he ought to expound what is asked of him. The poles remain constantly in the rings, when the teachers ever meditate in their hearts on the holy Scriptures. And they raise up the ark very vigorously, when they are quickly ready to teach what is necessary. About which the first shepherd of the holy Church, that is St. Peter, admonished other shepherds very well, saying: "Be ever ready to teach, and grant his request to every one who asks you rightly about the hope ye have in you." As if he had openly said: "Draw not the poles out of the rings, lest the ark be not ready to be carried."

XXIII. How great is to be the difference, and how variously men are to be taught with the art of instruction.

Hitherto we have said what the pastor is to be ; now we will show him how he is to teach, as the man of blessed memory, Gregory, who was by another name called Nazianzenus, taught it us long before ; he said : "It is not proper to teach all men in the same way, because they are not all of the same mind and morals." Because often the same instruction which benefits one injures the other ; as is the nature of many kinds of herbs and plants, on which some animals fatten, others die ; as with the same gentle whistling with which a horse is soothed a dog can be roused ; so also there are many remedies which diminish some diseases and increase others ; and bread, which increases the vigour of strong men, diminishes that of children. Because of the difference of the subjects, the words of the teacher must be different, that he may suit himself to all his subjects, to each according to his capacity, and yet so as not to swerve from lawful and right instruction. What therefore shall we call the thoughts of men but, as it were, the stretched strings of a harp, which the harper very variously draws and touches, and so prevents them from sounding differently from the tune he wishes? He touches them all with the same hand, to make them sound harmoniously, although he touches them differently. So every teacher must arouse the minds of his subjects to the same love and faith, with the same doctrine and various admonitions. In one way men are to be admonished, in another women; in one way the old, in XXVI. That the rich are to be admonished in one way, in another the poor.

The poor are to be admonished in one way, in another the rich. The poor are to be consoled and cheered, lest they despair too much because of their hardships. The others are to be terrified, lest they be too proud of their magnificence. To the poor man was said through the Lord to the prophet: "Fear not, for thou shalt not be confounded." But St. Paul rebuked the rich, when he said to his disciples : "Tell the rich throughout this world that they are not to be too proud in their thoughts, nor trust too much to these uncertain riches." By which we can clearly understand that the teacher of humility, when he spoke of the rich, did not say "Pray," but "Tell, and command." And we can also understand that the poor and weak are to be cheered, and the proud and puffed up are not to be revered, but are to be so much the more commanded rather than intreated the more they are seen to be puffed up because of their worldly magnificence and inflated with pride. Of whom Christ spoke in his Gospel : "Woe to you rich men, whose whole love and hope is in your worldly riches; ye care not for the eternal joys, but ye delight with all your heart in the enjoyments of this present life." It is necessary to console him who is melted in the furnace of his miseries, and he is to be rebuked and terrified who is puffed up with the joys and glories of this world; that the sorrowful may understand that the riches which are promised to them will come to them, though they do not see them yet, and also that the rich may understand that they cannot retain the riches they look at and possess. It is very necessary for the teacher to know who is poor, who rich, and whom he is to admonish as a poor, whom as a rich man. Because the rich and the poor man often so change their natures that the rich man is humble and sad, and the poor man is puffed up and conceited. Therefore the teacher must quickly direct his tongue against what he perceives to be the man's thoughts, that the poor and proud man may be rebuked and humililiated with his words, when he sees that his miseries are not enough to afflict and humble him. But the more gently he must soothe the rich and humble man the more humble he sees that he is, when the riches which puff up all proud men are not able to make him proud. And often also he must attract the rich and proud man with gentle flattery, to entice him to goodness ; because severe wounds are often alleviated and healed with gentle fomentations, and the physician stills and cures the paroxysms of the madman by soothing him according to his own desire. We must not forget how it happened to king Saul : when the evil spirit came upon him, David took his harp, and stilled his paroxysms with the music. What else can Saul's madness signify but the pride of the rich? Or what else is signified by David but the humble life of holy men? Therefore, when the unclean spirit came on Saul, David with his song alleviated Saul's fit of madness. So, when the mind of the rich through pride is turned to anger, it is proper for us to heal their mind by soothing them and restoring them to tranquillity by our talk, as David did Saul with the harp. Sometimes also, when we have to rebuke a rich man, we must first speak enquiringly, as if we spoke and asked about another man, and hear how he will judge in his case. And when we see that he has judged rightly, and he himself thinks he has judged rightly in the other's case, puffed up with this transitory authority, be angry with him who rebukes it, and that with his own wisdom and words he may bend the neck of his own pride, that he may not find any excuse, but be thus bound with his own words. Therefore Nathan came to rebuke king David, and pretended to speak of the cause of a poor man, and asked the king's opinion, wishing him first to judge himself by another man, and then hear his own sin, that he might not be able afterwards to dispute the same sentence. And also the holy man perceived both the sin and the hasty temper of the king, and his rashness, and therefore wished first to bind him with his own confession, and concealed from him that he would afterwards rebuke him. So the physician hides his knife from the man he is about to cut, thinking that if he show it him he will not allow him to cut him. But he feels very gently about the part he is going to cut, and cuts very quickly. So the prophet did the king with his words : I think he would not have cut him so soon, if he had told him beforehand that he was going to cut him ; therefore it was better for him to feel with the parable before he rebuked, as the physician feels, and strokes, and hides and whets his knife, before he pierces. When the physician comes to cut the patient, he first examines the swelling, and doubts his patience, whether he will submit to be cut. He hides his lancet under his clothes until he wounds him, wishing him to feel it before he sees it ; for he thinks that if he see it beforehand he will refuse.

XXVII. That the glad are to be admonished in one way, in another the sad.

The cheerful are to be admonished in one way, in another the sad.
To the overcheerful is to be shown the sadness which follows, and to the sad the joys which are promised them. Let the cheerful learn from the rebuking to fear, and let the sad hear of the rewards of the joy they hope for. To the cheerful is said : "Woe to you who now laugh, for ye shall afterwards weep." Let the sad also hear the saying which is addressed to them by the same teacher, which is Christ ; he said : "I shall see you again, and your hearts will rejoice, and no man shall deprive you of your joy." Many however are cheerful and sad, not from any worldly cause, but because of the motion of the blood and medtrymnesse. bodily weakness. Yet they are to be directed to guard both against immoderate joy and immoderate sadness, because they both stir up some vice, although they arise involuntarily from bodily weakness. The overcheerful are often liable to wantonness, and the sad to anger. Therefore it is very necessary to guard both against anger and excessive prosperity, and also against what is worse, and follows after, which is wantonness and unrighteous anger, that is, being angry with another because of his prosperity. And it is very necessary, when a man dreads either of these two more than the other, and strives against it, that he strive not so earnestly against it as to fall into the other, which he formerly dreaded less.

XXVIII. That the rulers are to be admonished in one way, in another the subjects.

The subjects are to be admonished in one way, in another those set above others. The subjects are to be so taught as not to be altogether troubled or afflicted, and those set above others are to be warned not to be puffed up by their authority. The subjects not to behave worse than they are commanded to do, and those set above others not to command them too intolerably. The subjects to submit to them humbly, and those set above others to rule them with moderation, which they can also understand from this example, which is addressed to them : " Children, be ye subject to your elder kinsmen in the Lord." To those set above others is said : " Provoke not your children." Let the children also learn so to obey their elders, as they themselves know in their hearts before the eyes of the unseen Judge, that they do it for the sake of God, and desire the reward from God. Let the fathers and lords also learn by their good lives to set a good example to their subjects. Those who are set above others must also know that whatever unlawful actions they perform, and thereby set an example to other men, they are worthy of as many punishments more than the others as they have led men astray, unless they afterwards cease, and convert as many as they can. Therefore it is very necessary for him to abstain from sins so much the more carefully as he clearly is able to understand that he

to be admonished to restrain themselves so much the more as they are freer than other men, lest they be afterwards more severely judged than other men. Those who are set above others are to be warned, lest they be judged after the errors of their subjects, thinking that they are pure by their own merits. The unoccupied and the single man is to be warned to be so much the more careful of himself, and so much the more laborious, as the care of other men engages him less.
 Those in authority are to be warned so to take charge of other men as not to neglect themselves; on the other hand, not to be so careful of themselves as to care too sluggishly for those who are entrusted to them.
 But to him who is at liberty to carry out his own will is said : " Thou there wisdom." Those who are to be above others are very terribly warned with the words which were said : " My son, if thou promisest aught for thy friend, thou hast given thy pledge, and thou art bound with the words of thine own mouth, and held by thine own speech." What greater promise can a man make for his friend than that of accepting his soul at his own risk ? It is like committing his hand to another, when he binds himself to him with his words that he will necessarily be careful and zealous about him for whom it was not necessary before, because he holds him with his own words, as if he were caught in a trap, and he is obliged to teach him well. Therefore it is very necessary for him, when he teaches well, also to act well,

And again, very soon after the same Solomon said : "Do, my son, as I advise thee : free thyself ; because thou hast pledged thyself to thy friend. But run now, and hasten, arouse him. Suffer not thine eyes to sleep, nor let thine eyelids doze." Whoever, then, makes his life an example to others must not only himself keep awake, but must also arouse his friend. Let him not think it enough that he only live well, but he must also draw away those he is set over from the sloth of their sins. It is very well said : "Let not thine eye sleep, nor thine eyelids doze." A man lets his eye sleep, when from folly and sloth he cannot perceive the vices of his subjects. Our eyelids doze, when we perceive something worthy of correction in our subjects, and from indifference we feign not to know it; then we doze. We are fast asleep, when we will neither acknowledge nor attempt to improve it, nor indeed care to notice it, though we are able to know it. He is not fast asleep, but dozes, who is able to know what is worthy of reproof, and yet from sloth of mind or indifference hesitates reforming and reproving his subjects in proportion to their guilt. At first he dozes; if he does not stop dozing, he dozes until he falls fast asleep. Thus also it often not to discuss the faults of their superiors too much or too boldly, even though they have good cause to blame their faults, lest for their criticisms they be elated and fall into pride. But they are to be warned very earnestly not to despise them for their faults, nor become more presumptuous towards them on that account. But if they see any fault in them so serious that they are obliged to mention it, let them do it very secretly among themselves, and yet for the fear of God continue under the yoke of their rule, and reverence them for the fear of God, as one is bound to reverence one's lord. the cave he was in, not thinking he was there. Then it happened that he went into the cave, wishing to go to stool there. And inside was the same David with his men who had long suffered the hardships of his persecutions. Then his followers called to him, and entreated, and eagerly advised him to kill him. But he soon answered, and very sternly forbade them, saying that it was not befitting to slay a king consecrated to God, yet arose, and stole to him, and cut off a corner of his coat, as a sign of having had him in his power. What is signified to us by Saul but bad masters? Or by David but good servants? As Saul could not purge his stomach without going to stool, so also bad masters, when they receive evil thoughts in their heart, cannot dismiss them without their bursting forth in foul works. As David forbore slaying Saul for the fear of God and his old allegiance, so do the pious minds of good servants. They abstain from all unrighteous blame : as David forbore slaying Saul with his sword, so do they forbear slaying with the sword of their tongue's blame the reputation of their lord, although they know that it is not altogether perfect. But if they cannot altogether abstain from proclaiming it, because of their own faults and their frivolity, let them speak of his most trifling faults, and that very secretly. As David very secretly cut off a very small corner of Saul's coat, his liege lord, so do those who secretly blame their lords, and yet so that it does not injure or annoy them. But if any one happen to engage in blaming his lord, because of his own faults, he must blame himself very severely for it, and regret the most trifling words. Therefore it is written that David, when he had cut off the skirt, struck his heart, and very bitterly repented ever having served him so unbecomingly, although his followers had advised him before to slay him with his sword. So let every one forbear slaying his lord with the sword of his tongue ; that is, though he have reason to blame him, that he is not to do so. If he happen, then, voluntarily or involuntarily to engage in anything against his will, although it be in a most trifling affair, it is necessary that he severely punish his heart and mind with repentance, and perceive his own sins, and sentence himself to such a punishment as he thinks his lord would

are to be admonished not to despise their masters. They despise their masters, if they neglect their will and commands. It is also to be made known also to the masters that they are presumptuous towards God for his own gift, if they do not understand that those who are subject to them by the dispensation of God are equals and associates in their nature. The servant is to be told to know that he is not independent of his master. It is to be made known to the master that he is to understand that he is the fellow-servant of his servant. The servant is commanded, and thus addressed : " Be subject to your worldly masters." And again, it is said : " All who are under the yoke of authority must hold their masters worthy of all honour and respect." XXX. That the foolish are to be admonished in one way, in another the wise.

Those who know and love the wiles of this world are to be admonished in one way, in another the simple. The cunning are to be admonished to despise what they know, the dull-witted to desire to know what they are ignorant of. The conceit of the cunning is first to be blamed, that they may not deem themselves wise. In the simple is to be strengthened whatever they can understand of divine wisdom, because, while they are not at all presumptuous, their hearts are in a very fit state to receive wisdom. But with the cunning, we must labour hard to get them to forsake the wisdom which they think is wisdom, and take to the wisdom of God, which they think folly. It is not necessary to advise the simple to forsake their wives, for they have them not. Therefore it is much easier for them to rise to righteous wisdom than it is for the cunning to turn thither, because he was formerly puffed up with conceit because of his wives. About the same thing St. Paul spoke : "Whoever among you thinks himself the wisest in guiles, let him first become foolish, that he may thence become wise." Of the simple is said : "Ye must not be too wise after the lusts of the body." And again, Paul said : "Those who seem to worldly men foolish, the Lord chooses, to confound the cunning, who are puffed up with the guiles of this world." And yet it often happens that they are converted with mild arguments, and the simple, again, with examples. It is better for the cunning to be convinced by a righteous argument, and to be bound and overcome by the argument. It is good enough for the simple to know that other men's works are blameless. Therefore the noble teacher, St. Paul, who had to teach both wise and foolish, perceiving some of the Jews to be wiser, others simpler, said, admonishing those learned in the old books with gentle words : "That which is now antiquated, is almost dissolved." And, again, he said to the foolish, perceiving that they ought to be admonished with some examples : "Holy men suffered in this world many indignities and stripes, and many bonds and prisons, they were stoned,

 And again, Paul said : "Remember those who went before you, who also to encourage the simple to greater enterprises, with the gentle struction. The shameless do not know that they do ill, without being told, and when told, they do not believe it, unless many men blame them for it. It is enough to reform the modest man, if his teacher remind him very gently of his faults. The more the shameless man is rebuked and humiliated, the better the chance of improving him, but with the modest man it is better to speak out what one has to blame in him only partially, as if touching it lightly. Therefore the Lord very openly blamed the shameless Jews, saying: "Your faces are as shameless as those of harlots." And again, he soothed the modest, saying: "I will make thee forget the shame and disgrace of thy youth, and thou shalt not remember the reproach of thy widowhood, for it is thy Lord who made thee." And again, St. Paul very openly blamed the shameless Galatians, saying: "Oh, foolish Galatians, who hath afflicted you?" And again, he said: "So foolish ye are, that what ye received spiritually ye wish to end carnally." He blamed the sins of the shameless, as if he suffered equally with them, saying:

 "I rejoice greatly in the Lord, that ye were ever willing to impute anything to yourselves, before I imputed it to you. It is good that ye do so now. Ye were not unoccupied, though ye did not do well."
 He spoke these words because he wished to reveal the sins of the shameless by blaming them, and conceal the negligence of the modest with gentle words.

XXXII. That the proud and puffed up in spirit are to be admonished in one way, in another the humble and faint-hearted.

The proud and presumptuous are to be admonished in one way, in another the humble and diffident. The presumptuous, when too confident in themselves, despise and revile others. The faint-hearted and diffident, perceiving their want of courage and strength, often despair. The proud and presumptuous think that all their own special thoughts or deeds are the best ; but the humble and timid think that what they do is very contemptible, and therefore often despair. But the teacher must very narrowly investigate the works of the presumptuous, that they may show them that in the things wherein they please themselves so much they displease God. We can best teach the confident by telling them, when they think they have done best, that they have done worst; that, when they think they have attained the glory and praise they desired before, they may find that they have only got disgrace thereby. Sometimes also, when the presumptuous and bold think that they have not committed any sin, we can most readily direct them right by half charging them with some manifest sin, which was formerly committed, that they may be ashamed because of it; that from the sin of which he cannot clear himself he may understand that which he is committing, although it seems to him that he is not doing

The presumption and obstinacy of the Corinthians Paul saw to be greatly opposed to himself, and he saw that they were very inflated and puffed up among themselves; so that some said they were Apollos's, some Saul's, some Peter's, and one said that he was Christ's. But Paul soon spoke out before them all the unclean sin, which had been done with the knowledge of all of them, and was still unatoned; he said: "We have heard of fornication among you, and worse than any we have heard of even among heathens, that is, that some of you had your step-mothers, and ye were not troubled at it, and would not put away from you those who did so, but were as elated as ye were before."  fainthearted and diffident on the path of good works by partially mentioning their good works, so that when we blame their faults we may also praise their virtues, that we may strengthen the weakness of their minds by allowing them to hear how we praise them, and again, that their sins may be chastised by our blame. Often we can be more useful to them by reminding them of their good works, and mentioning them, and if we perceive that they have committed an imprudence, we must not blame them as if they had done it, although it be done, but we must forbid them to do so, as if it were not yet done, that our former praise may prevent their being impatient of our blame, and that the praise may strengthen and regulate the minds of the weak and diffident for the blame. Of which the same Paul spoke when he perceived that the people called Thessalonians were firm in his teaching, and yet troubled with faintheartedness, because they thought the end of the world nearer than it really was; he began first to praise what he knew was their steadfastness, and immediately after, very gently admonished those whom he knew to be weakminded, and spoke thus: "We shall always have to say thanks to God on your account, brothers, as it is well meet, because your faith has surpassed that of many other men, and your love among yourselves is very abundant,

But soon after the gentle speech, he said: "I beseech you, brothers, by the coming of the Lord, our Saviour Christ, and by our congregation, that ye be not too quickly stirred from your senses; nor fear too much for any man's words or any prophet's spirit, or if any letter come to you, as if sent from us, to announce that the day of judgment is near." Thus the trusty teacher made them first hear the praise they liked, that they might afterwards hear the advice more cheerfully, that the praise might strengthen them so as not afterwards to be crushed by the admonition. When he saw that they were stirred by the expectation of their impending end, he spoke as if he did not yet know that they often happens that impetuosity and hastiness bring the mind to the

of it, when he knew it. Therefore they are to be told that they are often deceived by the impulse of the agitation of their mind, so that they cannot command themselves any more than others, and are very seldom able to perceive their own wickedness, until they have accomplished it. But if he does not oppose the agitation, he disgraces the good works which he often before accomplished with a calm mind, and so imprudently, from the impulse of his agitation, very quickly pulls down the good works which he long before carefully built up, and forsakes patience, which is mother and guardian of all virtues, through the vice of impatience, and also the virtue of true love. vice of impatience, the foster-mother of all learning and virtue is driven out; and the learning of every teacher grows through his patience, and every man is proved to be so much the less learned than another as he is more impatient. He cannot rightly teach patience, unless he himself patiently suffer the contumely of others. Sometimes also it happens, through the vice of impatience, that the mind is pierced by the sin of boasting, and he cannot bear worldly scorn; and if he has done any good action in the sight of God, he cannot bear to conceal it, but becomes boastful, and begins to proclaim it, not being able to endure men's contempt, but reveals it boastfully. Therefore it is written that the patient is better than the boastful man, for he would rather suffer contumely than proclaim the good he does secretly, lest he lose it through the vice of boasting. But the boaster would rather attribute to himself any good action he is conscious of; and even if he is not sure of speaking the truth, he would rather lie than have a bad reputation. But he forsakes and destroys all the good deed he performed before, when he forsakes patience. Therefore the prophet Ezechiel was very rightly commanded to have God's altar hollow above, that it might hold the offerings and gifts which were brought to it; for if the altar were not hollow, and the wind rose, it would scatter the offerings. What signifies the altar but the souls of righteous men? Because all the good that the righteous man does is brought before God's eyes as an offering, as all the offering was formerly brought up to the altar. What signifies the hollow on the altar but the patience of good men? For when a man humbles his mind so as to bear enmity and contumely, he produces a hollow in his mind such as the altar has on it. A hollow was commanded to be on the top of the altar, that wind might not scatter the offerings which were laid on the altar. That means that patience is to restrain the minds of the elect, that the wind of impatience may not agitate them, lest they lose the good works which were formerly accomplished. It was well said that the hollow on the altar was to be one ell broad and one ell long, because, doubtlessly, he who forsakes not patience preserves great unanimity. Therefore St. Paul said : "Let each among you bear the other's burden, then ye will fulfil God's law." God's law consists in having love and patience, which those alone fulfil who do not forsake them when annoyed. Let the impatient hear this speech which is written :

"Better is the patient than the strong and bold man ; and stronger and bolder is he who overcomes and subdues his own mind than he who takes a strong city." He who overcomes the citizens gains a less victory, because those he humbles and intimidates are strangers to him.
Therefore the victory which is won with patience is much greater, because in this case wisdom has overcome and subdued the mind, as if he himself had conquered himself, and patience had intimidated and put a halter on the mind. Let the impatient hear what Truth said to his elect ; he said : "In your patience ye shall hold your souls." We are

soul and mind, the soul and intellect have no control over the body. But patience has been appointed guardian of our nature. This the Lord showed us, when he taught us how to control ourselves with patience. We can also understand how great is the sin of impatience, through which we forsake the control of ourselves, which we ought to preserve through patience. Let the impatient hear another passage about them spoken in the books of Solomon : "The impatient fool reveals all his thoughts, but the wise man delays it, and waits his time." Impatience compels a man to reveal all his thoughts, and drives out all the spirit. The agitation drives it out so quickly, because no reverence for the advice of wisdom confines it in there. But the wise man restrains his speech, and waits his time, and does not desire revenge too soon, if he has been injured, but wishes to repent, that he may afterwards be able to forgive it ; and yet let him know that all sins against God which are unatoned will not be forgiven at the day of judgment, but rightly punished. But the patient are to be admonished again, that what they forgive with their words and deeds they are also to forgive in their hearts, lest with the anger of a bad heart they destroy the virtues of the good works which outwardly they offered to God completely, that, when no man knows whether it is entirely forgiven, he who knows may not punish it the more severely the more they stimulate humanity and forgiveness where none is. But the patient and forgiving are to be told to desire eagerly to be able afterwards to love the man who irritated them before, when it is necessary to forgive it, because, if love does not follow forgiveness, hatred arises, and the simulated virtue of forgiveness is turned into a worse sin. Therefore St. Paul said : "Love is patient." And soon after he said : "It is mild." Very clearly he showed with these words that, if we bear with men out of patience, we must also love them with mild heart. Therefore the noble teacher spoke, encouraging his subjects to patience ; he said : "Let all perversity, and wrath, and indignation, and clamour, and blame be taken away from you." Then he spoke as if he had settled all external evils, and turned then to the internal evils, and spoke thus : "And dismiss all evil from your hearts." For it is useless for a man to dismiss indignation, and blame, and clamour externally, if evil will, which is the mother of all evil, controls the heart; for it is useless for a man to lop off the boughs of any evil, without cutting off the root of the trunk. Therefore Truth spoke through itself: "Love your enemies, and do well to those who formerly hated you, and pray for those who persecute you and do you harm." With men it is a great merit to be able to bear with an enemy, but it is a much greater one with God to be able to love him afterwards; because those offerings are most acceptable to God which the fire of love consumes before his eyes on the altar of good works, as formerly under the old law the offerings were consumed with heavenly fire on the top of the altar. Therefore the Lord spoke again to certain men who had patience, but not love; he said: "Lo, thou canst see a little mote in thy brother's eye, but canst not perceive a great beam in thine own." The agitation of impatience in the mind is the little mote, but the evil will in the heart is the great beam. A very small breeze of temptation can stir the impatient, as a little wind can move the mote ; but the evil, obstinate will almost no wind can move. Therefore the Lord said again : "Thou hypocrite, cast first out of thine own eye the great beam, and then try if thou canst remove the mote from thy brother's eye." As if he had said to the unrighteous heart, which is afflicted internally, while externally it simulates patience : "Remove first from thee the burden of the evil will, and then blame another for his impatience and frivolity ; because, whilst thou dost not desire to overcome the evil will, and relinquish thine own impatience, thou wilt be the worse able to suffer another man's faults."

And yet it often happens to the patient man that, although he suffers some wrong or hears some shameful report of himself, he is not agitated at the time, but comports himself patiently, as if he had dismissed it altogether from his heart. But when he remembers it again after a little time, he is indignant at what he formerly passed over, and is again kindled with the fire of the injury. So he seeks and considers how he can avenge it, and by brooding over it turns to evil the humanity he formerly exercised. But it can be very soon remedied by his teacher, if he tell him whence it comes, and how the cunning devil stirs war and fighting between them two : the one he advises to begin to speak or do something disgraceful against the other, the other he advises to requite the disgrace.  estimates all that was formerly done to him, and considers it very intolerable, and disturbs his own mind with such excessive murmuring, that often the most patient man is ashamed of the victory he won over the devil with his patience; and when he is thus bound by the devil he grieves at it, and repents having so equably and patiently forborne requiting the ignominy, and thinks when he will be able to requite it worse.

 captured; or as if they had lain with a long illness, and yet had recovered, and a trifling fever had come, and killed them? The patient are to be warned to fortify their hearts after so great a victory, and hold the city of their hearts against predatory bands, and fortify it with battlements, as if they dreaded the return of the disease more than its beginning; lest the wily foe after a time rejoice more in entrapping them with his artifices after they had overcome him in an open fight, and breaking their stubborn necks.

XXXIV. That the benevolent are to be admonished in one way, in another the envious.

The benevolent are to be admonished in one way, in another the envious. The benevolent are to be admonished so to rejoice in the good works of others as themselves to desire the same, and so to boast of their neighbour's deeds as to imitate them. Let them take an example from their good works, and always increase them with their own, lest they be sympathizing spectators of other men's efforts without themselves helping them, and then, when the struggle is over, be without any reward in this present life. He who will not exert himself in the struggle of this present life, or run risks, afterwards has to acknowledge himself vanquished and humiliated, when he sees and hears those honoured who formerly began well, while he was idle.

We sin greatly if we do not love and praise the good deeds of others, but we shall get no reward for our praise if we will not to some extent begin to imitate the virtues which please us in others, as far as lies in our power. Therefore the benevolent must be told that they will have as much reward of other men's good works, if they do not imitate them, as we have of our laughter at the useless tricks of conjurers. We praise their tricks, and yet care not to possess them, because they are not creditable. We admire the approbation they get for their art, but yet we do not desire the same approbation. The benevolent are to be told that, when they see the good works of their companions, they must think for themselves, and not presume on the strength of the works of others; lest, while they praise their good works, they avoid doing so themselves. The worse punishment they shall have at last, the more they are pleased at the good deeds of men without imitating them to some extent. But the envious are to be admonished to perceive how blind they are, when they are grieved at the good works of others, and are sad because of their righteous joy, because they are very unhappy, when they suffer because others are prosperous, and when they see the happiness of others increasing, they think they will die from the discomfort of the other's happiness, so oppressed is their heart. Who can be unhappier than the envious man? When thou seest that he is externally afflicted, how much more thinkest thou that he is internally, because of the other's goodness! The other's good might also be his, although he could not yet do it, if he would love it in the other. All who continue in one belief and one will, are like many limbs of one man, and each has a special use; and yet, although the limbs are variously apportioned, each is as useful to the other as itself. Thence it happens that the foot sees through the eye, and the eye walks with the feet, the ears hear for the mouth, and the mouth's tongue moves for the benefit of the ears, and the belly has to support the hands, and the hand works for the belly. In the structure of our body we received all the services we now render. Therefore it is a great shame not to imitate what we are. For doubtlessly that is ours which we love in others, though we cannot do it ourselves, and what others love in us is theirs.

From this let the envious consider how great power there is in love, since it makes the toil and works of others ours without any personal toil. But the envious are to be told that, unless they guard against envy, they will be plunged into the old unrighteousness of the cunning fiend, through whose envy it is written that death came on the whole earth. Having lost heaven of his own fault, he was grieved at men being created for it, and increased his own sin with his envy, so that he strove to seduce men, that they might be lost, as he was. The envious are also to be taught to perceive to what great danger they are exposed, and how they increase their perdition, when they will not reject envy from their heart, but preserve it, until they fall into open sin, as Cain did. He would not have fallen into so manifest a sin as to slay his brother, had he not been envious before, because his brother's offerings were more thankfully received than his own. Therefore it is written that the Lord regarded Abel and his gifts, but not Cain and his gifts. Then Cain very quickly became angry, and drooped, and his anger against his brother, because his offerings were accepted and his own were not, became the cause of the fratricide, because he was annoyed at his being better than himself, and he determined, as he afterwards did, to slay him, come of it what might. Therefore the envious are to be told that, when they are internally consumed by the disease, they lose whatever other virtues they are acknowledged to possess. Therefore it is written that this carnal life is envy, which is the salvation of the carnal heart, although it makes the bones decay. What signifies the flesh but infirm and weak works, and what the bones but strongly wrought works? It often however happens that some, who are benevolent in many works, are considered infirm, and some in the eyes of men have the reputation of working firm and strong works; and yet, though they do so before men, for rivalry of other men's good works, they waste away internally. Therefore it is well said that carnal life is the heart's salvation, because he who preserves his innocence and good will, although he do weak or evil actions externally, he can amend it at some other time. But it is very rightly said that the bones decay through envy, because good works perish through the sin of envy, although in the eyes of men they seem XXXV. That the simple are to be admonished in one way, in another the perverse and cunning.

The simple are to be admonished in one way, in another the cunning. The simple are to be praised, because they always laboriously endeavour not to tell falsehoods. They are also to be taught sometimes to keep back the truth, because, as falsehood always injures the speaker, so also it sometimes injures some men to hear the truth. ciples, when he said: "I have many things to tell you, but ye cannot yet bear it." Therefore the simple and straightforward are to be warned, as they usefully avoid falsehood, so also to speak the truth usefully, and increase the goodness of their simplicity with caution, and so strive for security with simplicity as not to dismiss cautious consideration. Therefore the noble teacher St. Paul said: "I wish ye to be wise for good and simple for evil." And again, the Lord spoke about the same through himself to his elect: "Be cunning as adders and simple as pigeons." Therefore in the mind of the elect the cunning and fierceness of the adder is to enliven the simplicity of the pigeon; and, again, the simplicity of the pigeon is to moderate the cunning and fierceness of the adder, lest cunning and zeal lead

The cunning, on the other hand, are to be admonished, and told to understand how heavy the twofold toil is that they voluntarily impose on themselves through their sins. That is, that they are always considering, and fearing to be blamed, and are always troubled and alarmed at the thought. The other toil is that they are always seeking endless excuses how to clear themselves. But there is no stronger shield against the twofold toil than being sincere, for nothing is easier to speak and believe than truth. But when any one takes to excuses, he cannot extricate himself, but is obliged to think how he can make them plausible, and wearies his mind very severely with the toil. Of which toil the Psalmist spoke, saying: "The toil of their own lips oppresses them." Because the same foe who now seduces the mind with his deceitful flatteries, oppresses it afterwards with a very cruel requital. Of which was spoken through Jeremiah the prophet: "They taught their tongues, and trained them to falsehood, and toiled at an unrighteous work." As if he had openly said: "Those who could have been God's friends without toil, toiled that they might be able to sin." In truth, when any one is unwilling to live simply without toil, he will earn with his toil his own death. But many men, when vices are discovered in them, shrink from men's knowing what they are, and try to hide and cover themselves with the cloak of hypocrisy; and even of the sins which are openly seen they desire to clear themselves so eagerly, that often he who desires to rebuke their faults is openly deceived and blinded with the mist of falsehood, so that it almost seems to him that they are not at all like what he formerly supposed them really to be. Therefore it was very rightly said about the Jews through the prophet, concerning the sinful heart which always tries to excuse itself ; he said that the hedgehog had his hole there. The hedgehog signifies the duplicity of the impure mind, which is always making cunning excuses, like the hedgehog, whose feet and head and whole body can be seen before he is caught ; but as soon as he is caught, he curls up into a clew, drawing in his feet as far as he can, and hiding his head, so that when you have him in your hands you do not know which comes first, feet or head, and before you touched him you could see both feet and head. So do the cunning and impure minds: when some fault is discovered in them, then the head of the hedgehog is seen; then we can understand whence it arose, and wherefore. And then the feet are seen, when we perceive with what gradations the wickedness was perpetrated; and yet the impure mind very soon has recourse to excuses, wherewith it hides its feet and the gradations of its useless work. He draws his head in to him, when he with strange excuses professes never even to have begun the evil deed, and has wound it up within him with his artifices, as if the teacher held a clew in his hand very closely and carefully wound, and knew not where the end was, so far and firmly it is wound within the sinful man's mind, and encompassed with his deceit, that the teacher knows nothing of the evil he was to correct, although he knew it before, and he is so confused with the perverse trick of unrighteous excuses, that at last he lets go all the faults that he saw, and knows nothing of them. Truly the hedgehog has his hole in the heart of the idle man, because the vicious mind winds itself double inside itself, and hides itself in darkness with excuses, as the hedgehog hides itself in itself. Let the impure and cunning hear how it is written in the books of Solomon, that he lives surely who lives simply. The confidence of great security is simplicity and straightforwardness of works. Hear what was said by the mouth of the wise Solomon; he said that the doctrine of the Holy Spirit will flee falsehood. Hear also what is written after that, that he has deliberation and confidential discourse with the simple and straightforward. God speaks to man, when he enlightens the human heart with his own presence, and reveals it his secrets. And it is also said that God spoke to the simple, when with sublime and secret things he enlightens their mind with rays of his grace, and trial, and also suggestion. That is, especially, the minds which are not obscured by any shadow of duplicity.

 But it is, however, a special fault of the insincere that, when they humiliate others with their cunning, they boast and rejoice at it, as if they were much more cunning and wise than they; for they do not consider the severe requital, but the wretches rejoice at their own folly and sorrow. Let the same also hear with what consideration of divine authority the prophet Zephaniah threatened them, saying: "Yet will come the great and famous and terrible day of God, which will be a day of wrath, and darkness, and mist, and clamour, and trumpets, and din over all strong cities, and over all high corners." What signify the strong cities but fickle minds, strengthened and fortified with cunning excuses, so that the spears of truth cannot approach them, which are the admonitions of holy writ? for their vices. What signify the high corners but impure and insincere hearts? Because every wall is bent double in a hall. So is the heart of man: when he shuns simplicity and straightforwardness, he folds his mind with perverse and useless duplicity, and also, what is worse, he exalts himself in his mind with boasting and pride, because of the cunning of his own sin, and glories in his own vice. The day of the Lord's doom and the day of vengeance comes on the strong cities and high corners, when the wrath of the last doom destroys the human hearts, which are now closed in and fortified with cunning excuses against truth, and unravels the clew of the insincere heart. The strong cities fall, when the minds which are impenetrable to God are brought to the merciful gifts of God. Therefore the healthy are to be admonished not to neglect here in the world in their transitory health meriting eternal health. Of transitory times St. Paul spoke, saying: "Now is the time for obedience, now are the days of salvation." The healthy are also to be admonished to desire to please God while they can, lest afterwards they cannot when they will. Therefore it was said of Wisdom through the wise Solomon, that Wisdom will soon flee him who flees her, when she has often before called him to her, and he has refused to come to her. But afterwards, when he would like to have Wisdom, and desires her, she says to him: "I called you to me before, but ye would not come; I offered you my hand, but not one of you would look; ye despised all my counsel, and neglected my reproofs. What then can I do but laugh at your ruin, and mock, when the evil ye formerly dreaded comes on you?" Again, Wisdom spoke: "When they call to me I will not listen to them. They shall arise at dawn and seek me, but they shall not find me." But when a man despises his bodily health, when he is strong enough to do what he wishes, when he afterwards loses his health, then he first experiences what it was to have it while he had it, and desires it too late and unseasonably, since he would not preserve it before when he had it. Therefore, again, Solomon spoke very rightly: "Give not thine honour to strangers nor thy years into the hand of the cruel one, lest strangers be filled with thy toil, and thy resources be in the power of another, and thou mourn therefore at last, when thy body is brought

Or what is our honour in this earthly body but our being created after the image of our Creator? And what else is the cruel one but the expelled angels, who by their pride brought themselves to the punishment of death? And to the same death they wish to allure and seduce all mankind. What signifies the expression, "giving his honour to a stranger," but him who is created after God's image, when he spends the time of his life according to the desires of the accursed spirits; and that he gives his years to the cruel one who gives up the period of his life into the power of his evil adversary?  ever, then, in this world has perfect bodily health, and will not cultivate wisdom and virtue in his mind, but toils in learning vices and carrying them out, does not fill his own house with virtues, but fills the houses of strangers, that is, unclean spirits. Truly those who end their lives in wantonness and pride, do not fill up the number of the good, but of accursed spirits. It is further said, that he will then sorrow, when his body and flesh are consumed, because often the health of the body is directed to vices, but when he is deprived of his health with manifold pains of mind and body, the body is afflicted, because the soul, when

So he desponds, because he would not serve God while he could, because he cannot now remedy the mischief of his neglect with any toil, unless his repentance and God's mercy help him. Therefore the Psalmist said : "When God slew them, they sought him." On the other hand, the unhealthy are to be admonished to understand and perceive that they are so much the more God's children, and he loves them the more, the more he admonishes and chastises them. For if he had not intended to give his country to the obedient, why would he teach them with any severity ? Therefore the Lord spoke to

John the Evangelist through his angel, saying: "I rebuke and chastise those I love." Therefore also Solomon said: "My son, neglect not the Lord's castigation, nor be weary of his rebuking, for God loves him he rebukes, and castigates all the children he will receive." Of the same the Psalmist spoke: "Very manifold are the troubles of the righteous." Of which also the blessed Job spoke in his troubles, and mourning cried to the Lord, saying: "If I was righteous, I did not therefore exalt myself, and yet I am filled with affliction and misery." It must also be made known to the unhealthy that, if they will believe that God's kingdom is theirs, they must suffer hardships here in the world while it is necessary for them, as one must in exile. Of the same is spoken in the books of Kings, as it happened, and also as an example for us ; it is said that the stones in the famous temple of Solomon were so well fitted, and so evenly cut and polished before being brought to the place where they were to stand, that they were afterwards so joined together in the holy place, that no man heard there the sound either of axe or hammer. That shows us that we are to be in this exile outwardly cut with flagellation, that we may afterwards be reckoned and joined to the keystones in the city of God without the cutting of any flagellation, that all in us that is useless now may be cut away from us by the flagellation, so that afterwards one peace of God's love may bind and join us together very firmly without any discord. The unhealthy are also to be admonished to consider fathers and masters chastise and correct us, because they wish to make us docile and worthy of their inheritance, and that they may be the more happy with us. But what punishment of divine correction shall seem to us too heavy in comparison with our meriting the heavenly country which is never lost, and avoiding endless punishment? Therefore St. Paul said: "Our fleshly fathers taught us, and we dreaded them; they rebuked us, and we revered them. How much more, then, must we obey our spiritual Father, that we may live eternally! Our fathers in the flesh taught us to do their will, but it was for a very short time, because this world is very transitory, but our spiritual Father teaches us to partake of useful things, that is, meriting eternal life." how very healthy it is for the heart that the body is unhealthy, because the want of health compels the heart of every man to consider himself, and the good disposition which is very often driven away by health is restored by the memory of sickness, so that the heart which is unduly exalted remembers by the afflictions endured by the flesh what all mankind is created for. That would have been very rightly illustrated by the obstruction of Balaam's journey, had he obediently wished fully to follow God's voice and commands, and had gone after his will. Balaam would very willingly have proceeded whither he was told, but his zeal was opposed by the ass on which he sat. That was because the ass saw the angel standing opposite to him, and preventing his progress, which the human mind could not see. So also, when the flesh is hindered by any affliction, it shows the mind with the castigation what God's will is, the same will which the mind, which presides over the flesh, and should control it, cannot sometimes perceive, because the flesh often balks the zeal and will of the flourishing mind here in the world. As a man in a hurry is often balked, and his journey delayed, so the body delays the mind until it is afflicted with some disease, and then with the disease the body shows the mind the unseen angel standing in front of it, and preventing its useless journey with the bodily disease. Therefore St. Peter said very rightly : "The dumb and captive beast rebuked the prophet for his evil desire, when it spoke like a man, and so restrained the wicked and foolish desire of the prophet." The dumb beast rebukes the foolish man, when the afflicted flesh trains the proud heart to righteous and profitable humility. Therefore Balaam could not gain the favour of God which he prayed for, wishing to curse the people of Israel, and pray for himself; he was unsuccessful, because he directed his voice, not his heart, to his object: that was, he spoke one thing, desiring to speak another. The sick are also to be admonished to understand how great a gift of God the troubles of the flesh are for them, because they both wash away the sins he has committed, and also hinder him from doing those he would do, if he could, because, when he is tormented by the wounds of the body, these wounds cause wounds of repentance in the afflicted mind. About which it is also written in the Proverbs of Solomon, that the wound will heal after sloughing. The pain of the wound passes away with the slough, when the pain of the flagellation of worldly afflictions washes away both the committed and the meditated sins from the soul. Solomon also said that the same is the case with the wounds inside the belly. The word "belly" signifies the mind, because, as the belly digests food, so does the mind digest its sorrows with wise reflection. It was from the Proverbs of Solomon we gathered that the word "belly" signifies the mind, when he said: "Man's life is God's lantern; God's lamp investigates and illuminates all the secrets of the belly." As if he had said: "First, he illuminates him with his lamp, when he brings him to life, and again he illuminates him, when he inflames him with the taper of divine flame." That is, when he makes him understand his own unprofitable morals and ideas, which he probably had before, although he could not call them to mind. The slough of the wounds is the affliction of the body, and the pain inside the belly signifies the sorrow of the heart. Sorrow sweeps away evil from the heart. We are afflicted in the body outside the heart, when we are silently admonished by sickness to remember our sins, because then all the evil we formerly did is brought before the eyes of our mind, because the more the body suffers externally, the more the mind internally repents its former unprofitable works. Therefore it happens that through the open and visible wounds and pain of the body the secret wound of the mind is very well washed, because the secret wound of repentance heals the sin of perverse works. The sick are also to be admonished to preserve the strength of patience. They are to be told to consider incessantly how many evils our Lord and Redeemer suffered among the same men whom he himself had created, and how much reproach and how many vain words he endured, and how many blows he received from his revilers. The same who daily snatches souls from the hands of the old foe, and who washes us with salutary water, did not turn away his face from the spittle of those faithless men, when they spat in his face. The same who frees us with his mediation from eternal punishments, silently endured stripes. He who gave us eternal honour in the company of his angels, allowed himself to be struck with fists. He who heals us from the stabs of our sins, allowed a crown of thorns to be put on his head. He who intoxicates us with the drink of eternal life, experienced the bitterness of gall when he thirsted. He who prayed for us to his Father, though he is equally mighty with him in his Godhead, when he was prayed to in mockery, was silent. He who makes life for dead men, and himself is life, himself came to death.

 Why, then, shall it seem to any man too severe or hard to endure the castigation of God for his evil deeds, since God himself, as we said above, suffered so much evil for mankind? Who, then, who has a sound and good understanding, ought to be unthankful to God, because, although he chastise him for his sins, he did not depart without stripes from this world, who was, and still is, without any sin?

XXXVII. That those who fear God's chastisements or men's, and therefore abstain from evil-doing, are to be admonished in one way; in another, those who are so hardened in unrighteousness as not to be corrected by any reproof.

Those who dread chastisement, and therefore live innocently, are to be admonished in one way; in another, those who are so hardened in their unrighteousness that it is not possible to reform them with any chastisement. It is to be made known to those who fear chastisement that they are not to desire too much earthly prosperity, although they see that the wicked possess it among themselves, because it is common to both bad and good; nor let them flee present evils, as if they could not endure them, because good men often endure them here in the world. They are also to be warned that, if they eagerly wish to avoid evil, they are to fear greatly eternal punishment; yet not to fear so much as always to continue fearing, but with the nourishment of God's love to rise and grow ever more and more, to love the divine works. Therefore John the Evangelist said in his letter: "The perfect love of God drives away fear." And again, St. Paul said: "Ye did not receive the Spirit at baptism to serve from fear, but ye received it to become God's own children, wherefore we call to God, and say, Father, Father." Therefore the same teacher says also again: "Where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is freedom." If, then, any man refrains from his sins merely from fear of punishment, the mind of him who fears has no spiritual freedom, because, if he had not relinquished it from fear of punishment, he would doubtlessly have carried out the sin. The mind knows not that freedom is granted to it, when it is restrained by servile fear. Although a man has begun good from the fear of some punishment, yet he ought to finish from the love of something good. He who only does good because he fears the evil of some correction, wishes not to have cause to fear anything, that he may the more carelessly dare to do useless and unlawful things. It is very evident that his righteousness before God is lost, when he sins unnecessarily of his own desire, when it is very evident that he did not do good, when from fear he durst neglect it. On the other hand, the men are to be warned whom chastisement cannot hinder or restrain from their wickedness. They are to be rebuked and chastised with so much the greater severity as they are more callously hardened in vice. Often also such men are to be despised with all possible contempt, and slighted with every slight, that the contempt may instil into them fear and reverence, and that afterwards the divine admonition may bring them on the road, and turn them to hope. Also the divine texts are to be vigorously quoted to such men, that they may learn from them to understand, when they consider the eternal doom, what their own prospects are. Let them also hear how in them is verified Solomon's saying; he said: "Even if thou pound

The same the prophet lamented, saying: "Thou shatteredst them, and yet they would not receive thine instruction." Again, the Lord spoke about the same thing: "I slew and destroyed this people, and yet they would not turn from their bad ways," that is, from their evil works. Of the same thing, again, the prophet spoke: "This people has not returned to its chastiser." The prophet was grieved about the same thing, as a good teacher is, when he chastises his disciple, if it does not profit him. Of which the prophet spoke: "We physicked Babylon, but without curing her." shameful reproaches, and receives disgraceful castigation, and yet scorns reformation. With the same also the Lord reproached the people of Israel, when their lands were ravaged, and themselves led away, and yet they would not cease their wicked deeds, nor turn from their perverse courses ; the Lord said : " This my people of Israel has been turned to scoræ, and bronze, and tin, and iron, and lead in my furnace." As if he had openly said : " I wished to refine them with the liquefaction of affliction, and wished to transmute them to gold and silver, but they were converted in the furnace into bronze, and tin, and iron, and lead, because they would not in their troubles turn to profitable pursuits, but continued in their vices." Bronze, when struck, is the most sonorous substance there is. So he who mourns greatly under the divine castigation, is turned into bronze in the midst of the furnace. Tin, when scientifically compounded and made into tin, has a colour deceptively like that of silver. Whoever, then, behaves hypocritically under his castigation, resembles the tin in the furnace. He is like iron in the furnace, who will not cease from perversity under affliction, but grudges his neighbour his life. Lead is the heaviest of substances ; therefore he is turned into lead in the furnace who is so oppressed with the weight of his sins that not even under affliction will he give up his lusts and earthly desires. Of the same is again written : "There was great toil and expenditure of sweat, and yet the great rust could not be cleaned off them, not even with fire." He corrects us with fiery affliction, because he would clean off from us the rust of our vices ; but we will not let go the rust of unprofitable works under the fiery affliction, when under chastisement we will not reform our vices. Of which the prophet spoke again : " The blower was useless, because their accursed works could not be parted from them." It is also to be known that those are often managed with humane admonition, who cannot be converted with severe chastisement ; and those who cannot be kept from evil works by suffering, often give them up for gentle flattery : as the sick, who often cannot be cured with draughts of mixtures of strong herbs, are often cured with tepid water, and restored to their former state of health. XXXVIII. That those who are too silent are to be admonished in one way, in another those who are given to speaking too much that is useless and unprofitable.

The very silent are to be admonished in one way, in another those who waste themselves with loquacity. The very silent are to be advised, when they avoid a vice incautiously, not to turn to a worse one and involve themselves therein, as it often happens to them that, when they excessively restrain their tongues, they are much more severely afflicted in their hearts than the loquacious, since their thoughts boil in their hearts because of their silence, since they compel themselves to preserve excessive silence, and are therefore greatly troubled. Therefore it often happens that they are so much the more distracted in their minds with vacillation, the quieter and securer they expect to be able to be with their silence. But since we cannot find anything in their outward demeanour to blame, because of their silence, they are often internally elated, so as to despise the loquacious and count them as nought, and do not understand how much they open up their heart with the vice of pride, although they keep their bodily mouth shut; though the tongue lies humbly still, the heart is greatly elated, and the less he notices his own vices the more freely he blames all other men in his heart. The very silent are also to be admonished eagerly to strive to understand that it is not only necessary for them to consider how they are to display themselves outwardly to men, but it is much more necessary for them to consider how they are to display themselves internally to God ; and that they are more to dread the secret Judge who knows them all, on account of their thoughts, than the blame of their companions for their words and deeds. It is written in the Proverbs of Solomon : " My son, attend to my wisdom and prudence, and direct thine eyes and ears to being able to guard thy thoughts." thoughts approach us, and is dissipated by each of them. Of which spoke the Psalmist : "My mind and wisdom have forsaken me." And afterwards he returned to himself, and regained his wits, and said : "Now thy servant has found his wisdom, that is, praying to thee." Therefore, when a man restrains his mind, it finds that which it formerly used to avoid. Often also the very silent, when they have many unprofitable thoughts internally, they cause them all the more internal pain if they do not speak them out ; and sometimes it happens that, if they speak them out properly, they thus relieve their grief. We know that the hidden is more painful than the open wound, for when the matter which collects in it is allowed to escape, the wound is opened and the pain relieved. Those who are more silent than they ought to be must also know that they are not to increase their trouble by holding their tongue. They are also to be admonished, if they love their neighbours as themselves, not to conceal from them the reason of their blaming them in their mind, since speech is beneficial to both of them, because it both opens and lets out the inflammation in the one, and heals him, and teaches the other and restrains him from vices. He, then, who perceives any evil in his neighbour, and keeps silent about it, acts like the surgeon who looks at his friend's wound and will not cure it. How, is he not as it were his murderer, when he can cure him and will not? Therefore the tongue is to be moderately bridled, not to be bound immoderately. Of which it is written : "The wise man is silent, till he perceives that it is more profitable for him to speak."

It is no wonder that he is silent, and waits his time ; but when he perceives that it is a profitable time for speaking, he disregards silence and speaks all that he sees to be profitable to speak. And again, it is written in the books of Solomon which are called Ecclesiastes, that it is sometimes time for speech, sometimes for silence. Therefore he must sagaciously consider when it is profitable for him to speak, that, when he desires to speak, he may restrain his tongue, lest it be directed to unprofitable speeches, or, on the other hand, be idle when he can speak what is profitable. Of which the Psalmist spoke very well : "May the Lord put a guard over my mouth, and the door of constancy." He did not pray him to enclose him entirely with a whole wall, but he prayed that a door might be added, that he might sometimes open, sometimes shut. Thereby we must learn to arrange very cautiously a proper time, and when the voice is to open the mouth prudently, and also to arrange sagaciously the time when silence is to close it. On the contrary, the loquacious are to be taught to note carefully from how great virtue they have departed, when they slip about among many words. The human mind has the properties of water. When water is dammed up, it increases and rises and strives after its original place, when it cannot flow whither it would. But if the dam is thrown open or the weir bursts, it runs off, and is wasted, and becomes mud. So does the mind of man when it cannot preserve a rational silence, but bursts out into idle loquacity, and so is diverted various ways, as if it were all dispersed in little rivulets, and had flowed out of himself, so that it cannot return again into his own understanding and mind. That is because it is diverted into too manifold speeches, as if he had externally shut himself out from the meditation of his own mind, and so exposed himself naked to the wounds of his foes, because he is not enclosed in any defences of a fortress. As it is written in the Proverbs of Solomon, that the man who cannot restrain his tongue is most like an open city, which is not circumvallated. Therefore the city of the mind which is not enclosed in any silence must very often experience the spears of its foes, because it lays itself very open to its foes when it throws itself out of itself with useless words, and it is much the easier to overcome, because it fights against itself with loquacity, helping the adversary ;

therefore it is often overcome without any trouble. Often, then, the heavy mind slips down lower and lower by degrees in useless words, until it falls altogether, and becomes nought; because it would not formerly guard against useless words, it must therefore fall when it slips. At first a man takes pleasure in talking frivolity about others, and then after a time he likes to blame and backbite their lives without any fault of those he talks about, until at last it bursts forth from his tongue into open reviling of the others. Thus he sows the thorn of envy, until therefrom grows discord, and by discord the fire of hatred is kindled, and hatred extinguishes peace. Of which was very well said through the wise Solomon, that he who lets out the water is the cause of discord. He lets out the water, who allows the voice of his tongue to be dissipated in useless words. The wise Solomon said that a very deep pool is weired in the wise man's mind, and very little of what is useless flows out. He who breaks the weir and lets out the water is the cause of strife. That is, he who bridles not his tongue is he who destroys concord. Again, Solomon said: "He moderates anger who bids the fool be silent." Therefore he who is loquacious can never preserve virtue and wisdom. That the Psalmist showed when he said: "The loquacious man will never be corrected or taught in this world." Again, Solomon spoke of the same: "Loquacity is never without sin." Of which also Isaiah the prophet spoke, saying that silence is the support and helper of virtue. That signifies that the virtue of the mind which will never refrain from loquacity is dispersed. Of which the apostle James spoke : "If any one thinks to be pious, and will not bridle his tongue, the mind deceives itself, because his piety is very useless." And again, he said : "Let every man be very ready and zealous to hear, and very slow to speak." Again, about the same he showed what the power of the tongue is, saying that it is restless, evil, and full of deadly poison. And again, Truth, that is Christ, of itself warned us, saying : "Every vain word that men speak they shall account for at the day of doom." Those are evidently useless words, which wise men cannot perceive to belong to virtuous and useful necessity, either now or afterwards. If, then, we are to account for useless words, what punishment do we time comes a little afterwards when we wish, and cannot. Therefore, when we put off the fittest time, so that we are not inspired with a hearty desire, sloth steals on us, and rules over us, until it tears us away from every desire of good works. Of which was very well spoken through the wise Solomon : "Sloth infuses sleep into a man." The slow man perceives what he ought to do, as if he were always awake, and yet he is torpid, because he does nothing ; but sloth infuses sleep into him, says Solomon, because, although his thoughts are virtuous, by degrees he loses his good understanding, when he gives up the desire of the good work. Of the same is again very rightly said : "The indifferent and dissolute spirit shall hunger," because they are never refreshed with good works ; nor will they restrain and dam up their mind, as if a man weired a deep pool, but they let their mind flow away into the abyss of recklessness and folly according to all its desires, and do not restrain it with the labours of good works, but it is injured with the hunger of the lowest and foulest thoughts ; when it avoids being restrained by fear and instruction, it is distracted with evil and useless desires, and hungers after them ravenously. Of which, again, Solomon wrote, saying : " Every idle man lives after his own judgment." Of same again, Truth, that is Christ, spoke in his Gospel : " When an unclean spirit is driven out of a man, the house is clean. But if he returns, and finds the house empty, he fills it with very many." Often the slow man, when he hinders and delays the work he ought to do, thinks some works very

Of whom was very rightly spoken through the wise Solomon : "The sluggard will not plough in winter for cold, but he will beg in summer, and no man will give him anything." The sluggard will not plough in winter, when any one is hindered by the weight of sloth from desiring to do a useful work. It is said that the sluggard will not plough from fear of cold, because we often let go a great good from the fear of a trifling evil. Of which it is very well said that he will afterwards beg in summer, and no man will then give him anything. So it will be with him who does not sweat now with good works, and toil laboriously :

hereafter, when the Sun, that is Christ, appears at the day of doom with the greatest heat, he will be empty-handed, if in summer he prays for entrance into the kingdom of heaven. Of this man it was, again, very well spoken through the wise Solomon ; he said : " He who always fears wind will sow seldom ; and he who fears every cloud will never reap." What signifies the wind but the temptations of the accursed spirit, and what the cloud which is stirred by the wind but the opposition of wicked men ? The wind drives the cloud. So does the unclean spirit with his wind ; he stirs up wicked men. We have remarked above, that he would sow little who dreaded wind ; and again, reap little who feared clouds. That is, that whoever fears either the temptations of the devil or the persecution of evil men, and therefore abstains from doing any good, neither sows the grains of good works, nor afterwards reaps any sheaf of eternal reward. On the other hand, those who are too hasty are to be told, that when they anticipate the time of a good work, they lose their reward, and often fall into great evil, when they have not sense to be able to arrange the time for the thing, nor even care what they shall do, or when they shall do anything, though sometimes it happens that they know afterwards, after it has been done, that they ought not to have done so before. To such men Solomon spoke when he advised his servant, saying: "My son, do nothing without deliberation, then thou wilt not repent when it is done. But always make thine eyes go before thy feet." The eyes go before the feet, when good and wise deliberation precedes action.

timid, because timidity and gentleness are closely allied. Therefore, often when fear and instruction are relaxed more than is necessary, out of weakness of mind, the severity of authority is relaxed. The fierce and passionate are to be admonished differently; because, when they accept authority, their anger incites and provokes them to wallow in passion, and so the tranquillity of their subjects' minds is destroyed, and the calmness of their life is disturbed. Therefore, when anger possesses a man, he falls into some sin, so that he himself knows not what he does in his anger. The angry know not what they have in themselves, and also, what is worse, they often think that their anger is righteous zeal and admonition of some virtue. Therefore, thinking their vices are virtues, they accumulate and increase them without any fear. Often also the gentle become so torpid and effeminate and sluggish from their gentleness, that they cannot do anything useful.

 Often also the passionate deceive themselves in thinking that they have righteous zeal. Often also the virtue of gentleness is secretly mingled with remissness. Often also the passionate think that their vice is the fervour of righteous zeal. We must admonish the gentle to keep their gentleness, and avoid what is very nearly allied to gentleness, that is remissness. We must admonish the passionate to perceive what they have in themselves. We must admonish the gentle to perceive what they have not. The passionate are not to give up their zeal, but take care that it be discreet and moderate. Let the gentle learn and love it, until they have it. Let the passionate moderate their irritability. The gentle are to be admonished zealously to endeavour to have righteous zeal. The passionate, who think they have righteous zeal, are to be admonished to temper it with gentleness. The Holy Ghost appeared to us in the form both of a dove and of fire, because he inflames every one whom he inspires both with the simplicity and gentleness of the dove and the vigour of fire. He is not inspired with the Holy Ghost, who in the tranquillity of his gentleness gives up the fervour of righteous zeal; or, again, in the fervour of zeal gives up the virtue of gentleness. I think that we shall be able to explain this more clearly by citing some of St. Paul's instructions, for he had two disciples of very similar will, and like in many respects, and yet he taught them very differently. One of them was called Timothy, the other Titus. He said to Timothy: "Teach and entreat them, and blame their faults, and yet patiently." To Titus he said: "Teach the people; and threaten, and blame, and command, that they may know that ye have authority over them." What meant St. Paul, when he made so marked a distinction in his instruction, telling the one to assume authority, while on the other he inculcated patience, but that he perceived Titus to be rather more gentle and patient than he ought to be, and Timothy hastier than he ought to be? He wished to inflame Titus with righteous zeal, Timothy he wished to moderate. He wished to supply the deficiencies of the one, while he moderated the excesses of the other. The one he zealously drove with a goad, the other he restrained with a bridle. For the great husbandman, that is St. Paul, undertook the care of the holy assembly, to plant and tend, as the labourer does his orchard. Some trees he watered, to make them grow better ; some he pruned, when they seemed to grow too luxuriantly, to prevent them growing so much as to wither away and become unfruitful ; some twigs he irrigated with water, when they were slow of growth, to make them grow the better. But there are two very different kinds of anger : the one is, as it were, a counterfeit of anger, when one wishes to dissuade another from his evil ways, and bring him to virtue, and the other consists in a man's mind being agitated without any righteousness ; the former kind of anger is too immoderately and improperly excited against lawful subjects of indig-

 to leave alone. It is also to be known that there is a difference between the passionate and the impatient, which is, that the impatient cannot bear any annoyance to which they are subjected either by the words or deeds of others, while the passionate incur what they could easily avoid : although no one annoy them, they try to provoke others, and compel them to strife, and seek those who avoid them, and stir up strife and abuse, and rejoice in being able to busy themselves with discord. We can best reform such men by avoiding them when they are excited with their anger, because, when they are so agitated, they do not know what they hear when checked, but afterwards, when they recover their senses, they receive advice so much the more cheerfully the more patiently their passion was formerly tolerated, and are so much the more ashamed of their fault the more patiently they were borne with before. But the mind, while intoxicated with passion, regards all the good that is said to it as wrong. Therefore, the woman called Abigail very laudably concealed the folly of her drunken lord, who was called Nabal, and afterwards, when his drunkenness had passed off, very laudably told it him, and he perceived his own folly the more easily the more sober he was. So also, when it happens that the passionate pursue others so much that it cannot be endured, they are not to be opposed with open reproach, but to be partially checked very scrupulously and cautiously. We can explain it more clearly, if we meanwhile recount some of Abner's doings, how Asahel rashly and with violence threatened and pursued him. It is written that Abner said to Asahel: "Turn, and cease, follow me not, lest I pierce thee." He scorned to listen, and would not leave him. Then Abner pierced him with the butt-end of his spear through the small intestines, so that he died. Of whom was Asahel the type, but of those whose hastiness very soon draws them into destruction? who, when they fall into such anger, are the more cautiously to be avoided the more out of their senses they are seen to be. The name of Abner, who fled from the other, is, in our tongue, father's lantern. That means that the tongues of the teachers who proclaim the sublime light, when they perceive a man to be afflicted with anger and inflamed with fury, scruple to hurl the darts of their words against their anger, as Abner hesitated to slay him who pursued him. So, when the furious will not calm themselves with reflection, but follow any one as madly as Asahel did Abner, and will never stop, it is very necessary that he who wishes to subdue his fury, do not himself become angry, but oppose him with a display of calmness, and yet stab him very cautiously with words, that he may to a certain extent perceive his fault. Therefore Abner, when he turned against him who pursued him, did not pierce him with the point of the spear, but with the butt-end of the shaft. Piercing point-blank is assailing another with blame and reproof openly and unhesitatingly. Piercing the pursuer with the butt-end of the shaft is gently touching the angry man in some things, as if one hesitated to overcome him. As Asahel very quickly fell, so when the excited mind perceives that it is preserved by the gentle answer, its thoughts are soothed, and with the gentle admonition it is made ready to fall very quickly from the passion to which it was raised before. He, then, who refrains from the fervour and impetuosity of his passion, by being slain by a gentle answer, has his vice slain without any reproof, as Asahel was killed without the point of the spear.

XLI. That the humble are to be admonished in one way, in another those puffed up in spirit.

The humble are to be admonished in one way, in another the proud. The humble are to be told how great the loftiness is, and how genuine, which they aspire to, and also have. The proud are to be told how worthless this worldly glory is which they embrace and love, and have nothing of, although they think they have it. Let the humble hear how eternal that is which they desire, and how transitory and precarious that is which they shun. Let the proud also hear how transitory the things are that they desire, and how eternal those that they despise, and wish to lose. Let the humble hear the voice of afar." Let the humble hear what Christ said: "I came not on earth to be served, but to serve." Let the proud hear what Solomon said; he said that pride was the origin of all evil. Let the humble hear how Christ our Redeemer humbled himself even to death. Let the proud hear what is written about their head and teacher, that is the devil; it is written that he is king over all proud children, because his pride is the cause of our perdition, and the scheme of our redemption is God's humility. Our foe was created among all other creatures, but he desired his exaltation over all other creatures to be recognized. But our Redeemer, who is greater and nobler than all creatures, condescended to be among the most insignificant and humblest of men. The humble are to be told that, when they humble themselves most, they rise to the similitude of God. Tell also the proud that, when they exalt themselves, they fall down to the example of the expelled angel. What, then, is worse than pride? Because, when unduly raised, it is estranged very far from true loftiness. What can be loftier than true humility? Which, when it bows lowest, is most like its Lord, who dwells over all the highest creatures. There is, however, something between these two to be considered carefully, which is that some men receive the appearance of humility, some of pride, without knowing it.

Some, who think they are humble, out of fear yield the honour to men which they owe to God. Often also the proud, though they sometimes speak unhesitatingly, when they have to correct some fault are silent from fear, and think it is out of humility, and when they speak, they think they speak from unrestrained and fearless righteousness. But it is oftener from the impatience of their pride. The humble are often oppressed by the sin of timidity, when they dare not blame faults, pretending to do so out of humility. But the proud, when they pretend to care for nothing but virtue, are compelled with the pride of their unrestrained elation to blame and threaten those they should not, or threaten those that they ought more than they ought. Therefore the proud are to be warned not to be bolder and more confident than they ought to be, and the humble are to be warned not to be more subservient than they ought properly to be; lest the proud pervert the advocacy of righteousness to presumption, or again, the humble, when they desire to be more subject to others than they ought, be compelled to praise and respect their faults. It must also be borne in mind, that the proud can often be better rebuked if they are sustained during the reproof with a certain amount of praise. They are to be told of some of the good qualities that they have, or might have. We can best cut away that which we disapprove of in them by first making them hear from us something that pleases them, and thus inclining their hearts to us, that they may the more cheerfully hear whatever we wish either to blame or teach. Therefore they are to be reminded of the good they formerly did, that they may the more cheerfully hear what is to be enjoined on them; like wild horses, which, when first caught, we soothe and stroke with the palm of our hands, and subdue, that afterwards in course of time we may make them completely docile and tractable with whips. So also the physician, when he makes a draught of bitter herbs, sweetens it with honey, that the patient may not at first notice the bitterness of the herbs which are to cure him; but when the bitter taste is concealed by the honey, the deadly humour in the man is neutralized by the bitter drink. Thus the beginning and commencement of the blame and reproof of proud men is to be moderated and mingled with praise, that through the gratification of the praise and flattery they like, they may also suffer the blame and reproof they dislike. Often also we can better teach the proud as we wish by telling them how much need we have of them, as if their prosperity were more necessary for us than for themselves, and then asking them to abstain from their vices for our sake; their pride is the more easily reformed the more need they see that other men have of them. Moses, for example, whom God himself taught, and led through the wilderness with the fiery pillar by night, and by day with the pillar of cloud, wished to wean his father-in-law Hobab from his heathen customs, and subject him to Almighty God. He said: "We will now proceed to the place promised us by God; and come with us, that we may treat thee well, for God has promised prosperity to the people of Israel." Then he answered him, saying: "I will not go with thee, but return to my home and the country where I was born." Then Moses answered him: "Do not leave us, but be our guide; thou knowest all this desert, and where we can encamp." He did not speak so because his mind was anxious from ignorance of the journey, for it was honoured with the understanding of divine wisdom, and he was himself a prophet, because God taught him morality and everything more familiarly than other men with his frequent conversations, and ex-

Behold, however, the provident man, speaking to the proud Hobab, asked his help as if it were necessary for him, and yet asked for the other's benefit, because he wished to help him more; he sought him as a guide of their way, because he wished to lead him on the way of life. But he acted like a proud companion: he should have rejoiced so much the more at his speech, the more need he had; and the more humbly and honourably he spoke to him, the more humble he should have been with him, and the more obedient to his advice.

- XLII. That the steadfast are to be admonished in one way, in another the fickle and inconstant.

The resolute are to be admonished in one way, in another the irresolute. The resolute are to be told not to trust in themselves more than they ought, when they are not willing to acquiesce in the plans of others. The irresolute are to be told how careless they are, when they despise themselves overmuch, because through their want of resolution they can on every occasion be moved from their own determination. themselves better and wiser than others, they would not let their plans and opinions preponderate so much over the opinions of all other men. The irresolute are to be told that, if they considered at all what they themselves were, they would not at all let themselves be inclined on every side, nor even be moved, although they were manifoldly and variously stirred up, like a weak and useless reed, which can be moved by every breath of wind. It is said to the resolute through St. Paul : "Ye must not think yourself too wise." And again, he said to the irresolute : "Let not the wind of every doctrine move you." To the resolute is said through Solomon : "They shall eat the fruit of their own way." That is, when they are filled with their own devices. Again, Solomon said of the irresolute : "The minds of fools are very variable and inconsistent ; but the wise man's mind is always even, and consistent with itself." He is always the supporter of good designs, because he is very bold and ready for good works. But the minds of those others are very variable, because they make themselves very inconsistent by constant changes, for they never remain the same as they were before. It is also to be known that some vices originate from others, just as these formerly originated from others. Therefore it is to be known that we can most easily reform them with reproof, if we stop the bitter spring at the source, and dry it up; for the source of obstinacy is pride, and from irresolution arise doubt and inconstancy. The resolute are to be admonished to know the pride of their minds, and zealously to strive to conquer themselves, lest, when they scorn to be outwardly convinced by the good arguments and advice of others, they be internally bound by pride. They are also to be admonished to consider how Christ, who was always of the same will with God the Father, gave us an example of overcoming our will, when he said: "I seek not my will, but that of my Father who sent me hither." And also he promised to do so, when he should return at the last day, wishing us now the better to receive the virtue of instruction. He showed it, when he said: "I cannot do anything of myself, but I judge as I hear my Father." Why, then, shall any man think it too ignominious to yield to another's will, when God's own Son, when he comes in his majesty to judge, and display his glory, said that he would not judge of himself, but of him who sends him? The irresolute and infirm of purpose, on the other hand, are to be admonished to strengthen their minds with calmness and constancy. The twigs of inconstancy soon wither, if the root has been cut out in the heart, that is levity. A strong wall must be built in a place where the ground has previously been ascertained to be firm, where the foundation is laid. Inconstancy and irresolution of the thoughts shall also be overcome by guarding against levity. Paul cleared himself of the imputation of levity and inconstancy, when he said: "Do ye think that I employ any levity, or that I think according to worldly lusts, or do ye think that it is with me both yes and no?" As if he had openly said that no breeze of inconstancy could move him, because he had nothing of the vice of levity.

XLIII. That those who give themselves up to gluttony are to be admonished in one way, in another those who practise abstinence.

The greedy are to be admonished in one way, in another those who practise abstinence; because loquacity, levity, frivolity, and wantonness are apt to follow gluttony, and impatience, sometimes also pride, often follow abstinence. If the greedy were not afflicted with loquacity, the rich man would not have burned more in the tongue than in his other members, of whom it is said in the Gospel that he feasted daily, and who it was that said: "Father Abraham, have pity on me, and send Lazarus, that he may wet the tip of his finger in water, and cool with it my tongue, because I am tormented in this flame." With this speech was signified, that they who feast daily, sin more in the tongue than other members, because he was burning all over, and yet specially mentioned his tongue, and asked to have it cooled. And, again, frivolous and unprofitable works very soon follow gluttony. Which the holy law confirms, saying: "The people sat, ate, and drank, and then arose, and went to play." So gluttony often becomes lasciviousness, because, when the belly is full and distended, the goad of lust is excited. Therefore it was said with the divine voice to the cunning foe, who inflamed the mind of the first man with the desire of the

As if he had openly said: "With gluttony and unprofitable thoughts thou rulest over the hearts of men, because lust follows those who are found in gluttony." Which the prophet proclaimed, when he openly said what really happened, and signified that which was yet obscure, saying: "The chief of cooks overthrew the city of Jerusalem." The cooks' chief is the belly, because all their toil and service concerns it, how it is to be filled with the most luscious dainties. The walls of Jerusalem signify the virtues of the soul. The virtues are raised by the desire of celestial peace. But the chief of the cooks overthrows the walls of Jerusalem. That is, that when the belly is distended with repletion through greediness, it overthrows with lust the virtues of the soul. On the contrary, the abstinent are to be told that, if the abstinence of the spirit did not very often with impatience drive out peace from the bosom of tranquillity, St. Peter would not have spoken to his disciples as he did, when he said : "Now that ye have faith, do now good works, and have wisdom, and in wisdom have abstinence, and also teach it, and in abstinence patience." He would not have said so, had he not perceived that they wanted it ; and seeing that impatience often injures the man of great abstinence, he enjoined it on them in addition to abstinence. If also the sin of pride did not wound all the oftener the minds of the abstinent, St. Paul would not have said : "He who wishes to fast must not blame him who eats." And again, he said to the Colossians, when he perceived that they boasted of their abstinence : " Often, when a man fasts more than he need, he makes an outward display of humility, and is all the more proud internally because of the same humility." If the heart were not very often inflated with the pride of abstinence, the proud Pharisee would not have esteemed abstinence so great a virtue as he did, when he said : " I fast twice in the week." The gluttonous, on the contrary, are to be admonished, if they cannot abstain from the vice of greediness and gluttony, at any rate not to run themselves through with the sword of fornication, but understand how much frivolity, folly, and loquacity proceeds from gluttony, lest they aggravate it with the other evil, and lest by pampering their belly so delicately they be cruelly caught in the trap of vices.

But we must consider, as often as we put our hand to our mouth for excessive greediness, that we renew and recall to mind the sin wherewith our oldest kinsman ruined us, and that we have departed so much the further from our later Kinsman who afterwards interceded for us, the oftener we fall into that vice. The abstinent, on the contrary, are to be admonished to be very careful, that, when they avoid the vice of gluttony, from that good a worse evil may not arise, lest, when the flesh becomes lean, the mind rush into impatience, so that the victory over the flesh is useless, if the mind is overcome by anger. Often also, when the mind of the abstinent man is oppressed with anger, joy comes seldom, as if it were a guest or stranger ; because the mind is polluted with anger, and therefore loses the advantage of abstinence, because he did not refrain from the spiritual sin. Of which was very rightly said through the prophet : "By your fast-days is known your will." And soon after he said : "For meetings, and disputes, and anger, and fisticuffs ye fast." Good will always belongs to joy, and fisticuffs to anger. In vain therefore is the body afflicted with fasting, when the mind is let loose, and excited, and distracted improperly and unreasonably by vices. And yet they are to be admonished not to diminish their fasting, nor, again, to think that it alone is a very lofty virtue in the eyes of the unseen Judge, lest they think that it alone is a virtue of great merit, and so become too much puffed up in spirit. Of which was spoken through Isaiah the prophet : "I chose not this fasting, but this is the fasting I chose : break thy bread for the hungry, and lead the wanderer and beggar into thine house." From which we can consider how lightly abstinence is estimated, if it is not increased with other virtues. Of which Joel the prophet spoke : "Hallow your fast." A man hallows his fast when he increases it with other good works ; then he can show to God a very acceptable abstinence. Therefore the abstinent are to be told, that they bring to God a very worthy abstinence, when they give that portion of their substance to the poor of which they deprive themselves. But we must listen attentively to what the Lord said, rebuking the Jews through Zachariah the prophet ; he said : " All your fasting and weeping in the

He fasts not for God, but for himself, who will not give the poor what he leaves of his meal, but wishes to keep it for another meal, to fill his belly with it afterwards. But he ought to eat so that the impulse of greediness may not move him from the consistency of his mind, nor, again, the mortification of his body deceive the mind with pride. Let the greedy hear the words which Christ spoke with his own mouth, saying: "Take care that your hearts be not oppressed with gluttony, and drunkenness, and too manifold cares of this world, lest in these works ye be overtaken by the fierce and terrible day, which shall come unawares on all the dwellers of earth, like a snare."  the belly's will, and the belly the meat's, God will destroy them both."
 And again, he said : " Accustom yourselves not to gluttony and drun-

 Again, let the abstinent hear what he said to them ; he said that to the pure all is pure, and to the impure is nothing pure. Again, let the greedy hear what he said to them ; he said that their belly was their god, and that they gloried in their disgrace. Let the abstinent

Let the gluttonous hear what St. Paul said; he said that it were good for a man to abstain from meat and wine, as an example to his brothers. Let the abstinent also hear what he said again; he said that "ye may drink wine moderately for the weakness of your stomachs." XLIV. That those who generously give away their own property are to be admonished in one way, in another those who still desire to rob others.

Those who generously give away their property are to be admonished in one way, in another those who still strive after that of others, and rob them. Those who generously give away their own are to be admonished not to be puffed up in spirit, so as to exalt themselves above those to whom they give their property, nor account themselves better than the others, although these live by them. Earthly masters are appointed to arrange the degrees and avocations of their households, and rule them, and the people are appointed to live by their decrees. The masters are commanded to do for them what is needful, and the servants are commanded to content themselves with what is given to them. And yet the masters often sin, and the servants who are righteous continue in God's grace, and those incur his displeasure who ought to distribute it to them, and those are without anger who have to live by their gifts. They are also to be admonished who generously give away what they have, to understand that they are appointed stewards of the God of heaven, to distribute these transitory goods. They must so much the more graciously distribute them the more transitory and precarious they perceive that that is which they distribute, because they can understand that they are appointed to their ministration to distribute to them God's gifts. Why, then, shall they be on that account proud and inflated in their minds?

It were very necessary for them to let the fear of God humble them. It is also very necessary for them carefully to resolve not to distribute what is entrusted to them dishonourably, lest they give anything to those to whom they ought to give nothing, or nothing to those they ought to give something; or, again, much to those they ought to give little, or little to those they ought to give much, lest through their hastiness they uselessly throw away what they give, or afterwards bitterly repent having given it, and themselves have to ask, and therefore be disheartened; or afterwards desire to receive here the rewards of their charity, lest the desire of transitory praise quench the light of generosity; or, again, the generosity be mingled with sadness, or, again, because of the gifts which they think they have

God's mercy, which he earns who is poor in spirit. But the mind of the giver knows not how to endure poverty, when he is deprived of much that he would have ; then he reproaches himself with the hastiness with which he formerly gave too much. Therefore he must consider, before he gives away anything, whether he can afterwards forego it without regret, lest he lose the reward of his former generosity, and the spirit be still more lost through his murmuring. Let those also hear, who give nothing to those to whom they ought to give a little, what is said to them in the Gospel ; it is said : " Give to all who ask thee." Again, let those who give something to those they ought to give nothing to, hear what is said to them in Solomon's books ; it is said : " Give away thy goods, yet not to the sinful. Do good to the humble,

He eats and drinks with the sinful, and gives them his bread and wine, who aids and honours the unrighteous man, because he is unrighteous. So also, many rich men in this world let Christ's poor die of hunger, and support vile mountebanks in luxury, and are immoderately generous to them. Those who give their bread to the sinful who are poor, not at all because they are sinful, but because they are men and poor, do not give their bread to sinners but to righteous men, if they do not love in them their evil, but their nature, that is, their being men as well as themselves. nished to be very careful not to commit the sin again which they now atone for with their alms, lest they afterwards have to do the same. Let them not be too confident of their bargain, nor think that God's righteousness is for sale, as if they could buy it with their money, and afterwards sin as much as they like with impunity, as long as they have money to buy themselves off with. "The spirit is more than meat, and the body than raiment." When any one liberally gives both meat and clothing to the poor, and pollutes his mind and body with unrighteousness, he gives to God the least righteousness, and withholds from him the greatest, when he sins in his mind and virtue, and yet gives his alms : he gives his possessions to God, and himself to the devil. On the other hand, those who still desire to rob others are to be admonished to listen attentively to the speech which it is said in the Gospel the Lord will say when he comes to judgment; he will say: "I hungered, and ye gave me not anything to eat. I thirsted, and ye gave me not to drink. I was a stranger, and ye would not receive me. I was naked, and ye would not clothe me. I was sick and in prison, and ye would not visit me." It is promised to these men that he will say: "Depart from me, ye accursed, into eternal fire, which is prepared for the devil and his angels." He does not say whether they robbed, or did any other evil, and yet says that they are to be held in eternal fire. From which we can understand of how great punishment those are worthy who rob others, since those are punished so severely who unwisely retain their own. Since those are punished so severely who will not give away their own, consider what punishments are to be expected for those who rob others. What do ye think that unrighteousness carried out deserves, when neglected piety deserves so great punishment? Let the rapacious, who are always striving to rob others, hear what is said of them; it is said: "Woe to him who always gathers on himself the heavy mud, and increases what is not his." Gathering on oneself the thick mud, and loading oneself therewith, is when the avaricious man heaps on himself wrongfully the burden of earthly possessions, and wrongfully enlarges his yard and lands. But they should hear the words spoken about them in the books of Isaiah; it is said: "Woe to you who gather house to house, and join one field to another to the boundary of the land, as if ye

As a flying bird, when it is hungry, sees the bait on the earth, and from its desire of the meat, forgets the snare with which it is strangled; so it is with the avaricious man. He sees the riches he desires, and does not believe in the deceitful snare until he experiences it. Those who desire the possessions of this world, and ignore the mischief that follows, must hear what is said of them in the books of Solomon; it is said: "The inheritance that ye first aspire to, will at the end be deprived of every blessing." He, therefore, who desires to become rich at the beginning of his life by unfair means, will deprive himself of blessing and riches at the last day. When they desire through their wicked avarice ever to increase their worldly riches, they will be deprived of the eternal country of our Father. Those who wish to acquire much, and also those who can acquire all they desire, may hear what Christ himself said; he said: "What profits it any man to buy up the whole of this world, if he destroy his soul?" and destroyed himself?" But it is more easy to quiet the greed of the rapacious, if the teacher tell them how fleeting this present life is, and remind them of the rich men who were long of acquiring what they enjoyed for a short time, how quickly unexpected death in a short time deprived them of what they for a long while had been wrongfully acquiring. Although they did not soon accumulate it, yet they very quickly lost it all at once, and took away none of it with them, except the sin of the evil works which they brought to God's judgment. It can easily happen that, if we tell them such things, they will also join us in blaming the others, and afterwards be ashamed of themselves, remembering that they do the same that they blamed in the others.

XLV. That those who neither desire the property of others, nor care to give away their own, are to be admonished in one way ; in another those who desire to give away what they acquire, and yet will not cease robbing others.

In one way are to be admonished those who neither desire the property of others, nor care to give away their own ; in another those who wish to give away their own, and yet cannot give up robbing others. Those who will not give away their own, and do not desire that of others, are to be admonished to consider carefully that this earth, whence their gain came, is given to all men to be held in common, and therefore produces for all men common nourishment. therefore, wrongly, who argues that he is innocent, if he appropriates specially to himself the good things which God gave us for common use. But when they will not give away what they have received, they fatten on the death of their neighbours, because they kill about as many poor men as they could easily have helped with their alms, if they would. Therefore, when we give the poor what they require, we give them their own, not ours ; and we can more rightly say that we pay them a debt, than that we act generously towards them. Therefore Truth, which is Christ, teaching us to give alms cautiously, said : "Take heed that ye do not your righteousness before men." To this speech belongs also the Psalmist's song, which he sang, saying : "The righteousness of him who distributes his goods, and gives to the

Of which Solomon spoke : " He who is righteous is always giving, and never ceases." They are also to be admonished to consider carefully that the fig-tree, of which it is said in the Gospel that it bore no fruit, stood useless ; therefore the good labourer was angry with it for overgrowing the land without fruit. The fig-tree overgrows the land, when the miser hides and uselessly conceals that which might be useful to many. As the fig-tree overshadows the land, so that nothing grows under it, because the sun's rays cannot reach it, and it does not bear any fruit above it itself, but the land is all useless, it spreads over it so ; so it is with the useless and foolish man, when with his disgraceful sloth he covers the district he possesses, and will neither himself make his authority beneficial, nor admit him who is ready to shine over it with the sun of good works, and make it useful and fruitful. But many men's habit is to excuse themselves with these words, saying : " We enjoy our own, not coveting that of others. If we do nothing deserving of a good reward, we also do no harm that we can be reproached with." But they speak thus because they shut the ears of their heart against the divine instruction. It is not said of the rich man blamed in the Gospel, of whom it is said that he feasted daily, and was regaled with great luxury, and was arrayed daily in purple and white raiment, that he was blamed for robbing others, but because he enjoyed his own immoderately, and gave nothing to others; and yet after this world he received the punishment of hell, not at all because he had done anything unlawful, but because he would not abstain from anything of what was lawful, but enjoyed it very immoderately, and gave himself up altogether to these worldly riches. The miserly are also to be admonished to understand that the chief injury they can inflict on God consists in doing nothing for him, who gave them all that they have. Of which the Psalmist said: "He gave God no price for his soul, nor any ransom for his mercy." The price, of his soul is, paying him good works for the gift he formerly granted him. tree that does not bear good fruits shall be cut down and cast into the fire and burnt." Now is the axe placed at the root of the tree, and let those fear the impending stroke, who do no good, and yet deem themselves innocent because they do no harm. But it is necessary for them to relinquish their indifference and foolish sloth, lest they be rooted out of this present life. As the tree whose roots are cut off withers, so they have cause to fear having their roots cut off in this present life, if they from carelessness will not produce the fruits of good works. Those, on the other hand, who are willing to give what they have, and yet will not abstain from despoiling others, are to be admonished to take care, whilst they wish to seem generous, that for that good fame they do not become the more depraved, lest it happen to them, as we said above, that, when they distribute senselessly and immoderately, because of their poverty they become discontented and impatient, so that from poverty they begin again to be greedy and rapacious. What greater misfortune can befall them than that which befalls them through their alms, through which, if distributed immoderately, they become avaricious again? Is it not as if they were to sow good, and every evil were to grow up thence for them? But they are first to be admonished to know how to retain their own wisely, and secondly, not to desire that of others; because the thorn of greed never withers in the crown, unless the root has been cut off or burnt at the stem. extortion, if before distributing he knows how to determine what he cares to give, and what he ought to keep, so that he may not afterwards have to disgrace the virtue of generosity with greed and extortion. When they have learnt this, they are then to be taught how to distribute generously that which they have over what they are to satisfy their greediness with; because, if they do not so, they will necessarily have to collect another property afterwards, to make up for the one that they formerly charitably and generously gave away, as if they put the sin against the alms. It is one thing to give alms from repentance of sins, another to sin and rob because one desires afterwards to give alms with the spoil. But that is no alms, because it does not produce any sweet fruit, but soon the fruits turn bitter on such alms, and thus spoke : " I am the Lord : I love righteous judgagain, he said : " The offering of the wicked is accursed, because it is brought from unrighteous gain and evil deeds." And often that which they think they give to God is taken from the poor. But the Lord proclaimed, through the wise Solomon, how great his indignation is at such a deed, saying : " If any man brings me an offering, wrongfully snatched from the possessions of a poor man, it is as if one were to wish to sacrifice to the father his own child as a gratification and offering, and kill it before his eyes." What sight is more intolerable than the death what indignation the Lord endures the alms which are brought to him from rapine, since he accounted them like the slaughter of the child before its father's eyes. But the rapacious very often think of how much they give, and will very seldom remember how much they take, as if they calculated the wages they have paid to God, and wished to ignore the sins they have committed against him. But they should hear the saying which is written in the books of the prophet Haggai ; he said : " He that collects wages, puts them in a purse with holes in it." He puts what he intends to pay as wages into a purse with holes in it, who knows where he puts it, but does not know where he loses it. So it is with those who like to know what they give, but not how wrongfully they acquired or wasted it ; for they,

XLVI. That the peaceful are to be admonished in one way, in another the quarrelsome.

The peaceful are to be admonished in one way, in another the quarrelsome. The quarrelsome are to be admonished to know certainly that they do not possess so many good qualities, as ever to be able to be spiritual, if through strife they neglect to live properly and virtuously on good terms with others. It is written in the books of St. Paul, that the fruit of the Spirit is love, and joy, and righteous peace. He, then, who does not care to keep peace, rejects the fruit of his spirit. Again, St. Paul said : "When there are among you evil spirit and strife, are ye not then carnal ?" And again, he said : "Seek peace and goodness with all men, without which no man can see God." And again he admonished, saying : "Zealously unite yourselves with concord and peace, that ye may be of like mind as ye are of like body, as ye are all called to the same hope." To the summons of that hope no man can come, unless he run thither with concord towards his neighbour. And yet very many receive a special gift, and then presumptuously relinquish the gift which is greater, that is concord ; as many do who bridle their greediness and subdue their bodies, so as to be able to fast better than others, and then through that good quality lose that which is better than abstinence, that is concord. Let him who wishes to separate abstinence from concord consider the words of the Psalmist; he said: "Praise God with the timbrel and in the dance." The timbrel is made of dry hide, which sounds when struck; and in the dance a number of men are assembled to sing something with the same words and voice. He, therefore, who mortifies his body, and neglects to live in concord with his neighbour, praises the Lord with the timbrel, but will not do so with the dance. Often also, when any one is exalted above others by greater wisdom, he wishes to separate himself from the society of others; and the more he knows, and the wiser he is than others, the more foolish he becomes, and the more he opposes the virtue of concord. But they should hear the words of Truth itself, saying: "Have salt in you, and have peace among you." He mentioned salt instead of wisdom, because he wished us to have both peace and wisdom; for it is no excellence or virtue to have wisdom, and not to care for peace, because the more he knows, the worse his guilt, and the greater the injury he inflicts on himself with the deceit. He is the less able to excuse himself from deserving punishment, the more able he was with his wisdom carefully to avoid sin, if he would. But it was very rightly said to him through the apostle James; he said: "If ye have a bad spirit among you, and contumely and strife in your hearts, boast not nor rejoice thereat, and strive not with your falsehoods against the truth; for that wisdom has not descended from heaven, but is earthly and animal, and also devilish. But that which comes from God is of good will and peaceful." Being of pure and good will, is purely and righteously understanding what he understands. Being peaceful consists in not exalting himself at all above his equals, nor separating himself from their society. The quarrelsome are to be told to know, that as long as they keep aloof from the love of their neighbours, and are at variance with them, they cannot bring anything good to please God. Of which is written in the books of Christ : "If thou wilt bring thine offering to the altar, and there remember well something that thy neighbour has done against thee, leave thine offering before the altar, and go first after him ; reconcile thyself with him before thou bring thine offering ; then bring thine offering." to go in quest of his neighbour, and give him the chance of returning to what is right. From this precept we can judge how intolerable an evil discord is, when offerings are refused because of it. Since every evil can be neutralized with good, it is too great a sin which causes no good to be acceptable, unless the evil be relinquished beforehand. The quarrelsome are to be admonished, if they will not open their bodily ears to hear the divine instruction, to open their mental eyes, and observe these earthly creatures ; how birds of one and the same kind fly so peacefully, and how seldom they care to desert their family ; and also how the dumb cattle gather together in herds, and feed together. Now we can understand from the peacefulness of irrational animals, how great a sin the rational race of man commits in being quarrelsome, when with their rational intellect they neglect what the dumb animals preserve in their kind. The peaceful, on the other hand, are to be admonished, when they love the peace that they have here more than they ought, and do not desire to attain to eternal peace. But the tranquillity they desire often injures their minds very severely, because, the more this tranquillity and ease please them, the less they are pleased with that to which they are called, and the more they desire this present, the less they aspire to the eternal life. Of this same Christ spoke through himself, when he distinguished between this earthly and the heavenly peace, and diverted his apostles from the present to the eternal peace, saying: "My peace I give to you, and my peace I leave with you." As if he had said: "I lend you this transitory, and give you the lasting peace." If, then, the mind and love of man are entirely devoted to the transitory peace, he can never attain to the one which is given to him. But we are to have this present peace in such a way as to love, and yet despise it, lest the mind of him who loves it fall into sin, if he love it too immoderately.

 The peaceful are also to be admonished not to desire peace too excessively, lest, through desire of this earthly peace, they leave unblamed the bad vices of others, and so alienate themselves from the peace of their Creator by conniving at unrighteousness ; lest, when they fear discord outwardly, they be inwardly cut off from the society of the internal Judge. What else is this transitory peace but, as it were, a love the trace of anything in the dust, and not to love that which made the trace? Of which David spoke, when he entirely joined the society of internal peace, and proclaimed that he would have no concord with the wicked, saying: "How, do I not hate all those, O Lord, who hate thee? Before thy foes my spirit shrank, and I hated them with perfect hatred, because they were also my foes." We ought to hate God's enemies so perfectly as to love what they are, and hate what they do. We must help their lives by blaming their faults. But how can we think how great a sin it is to tire of blaming the bad, and make peace with the worst, when the prophet brought it as a gift and offering to God, that he excited the hostility of the wicked against himself for the love of God? Therefore it was that the tribe of Levi grasped their swords, and went out through the host, slaying the sinful; and therefore it is written that their hands were hallowed to God, because they spared not the sinful, but slew them. Therefore, also, Phineas despised the friendship of his neighbours, when he slew his own companion because he lay with the Midianitish woman, and slew the harlot also; and so with his anger he appeased the anger of God. And again, Christ said through himself: "Think not that I came on earth to send peace on the earth, but a sword." Because, when we incautiously associate ourselves in friendship with wicked men, we bind ourselves to their sins. From this same cause Jehoshaphat, who before was praiseworthy in all the deeds of his life, very nearly perished entirely through the friendship of Ahab. He was rebuked

From which we can hear, that the more we associate and agree in the friendship of the wicked, the farther we are separated from the highest righteousness. The peaceful are also to be admonished not to fear to disturb this transitory peace with themselves by severity, when they have to speak. And again, those who outwardly trouble them with severity are to be admonished to preserve peace entire within themselves notwithstanding. Both of which David said that he very carefully observed, saying : "I loved those who hated peace ; and when I chid them, they attacked me without cause." They attacked him because of the quarrel, and yet he was their friend ; he did not tire of blaming the foolish, and although they blamed him, he loved them. Of this same St. Paul spoke again . "I would, if it could be so, that ye had peace with every man, as far as is in your power."

 He said "if it could be so," and he also said "as far as is in your power," because he knew that it is very difficult to do both, to chide him who does evil, and to preserve peace with him. But it is very necessary for us, although this transitory peace be disturbed by our quarrel in the minds of the wicked, that it be entirely preserved in ours. Therefore he said of peace, "as far as is in your power,"

About which the same Paul admonished his disciples in another place, and spoke thus: "If any one will not listen to our words and letters, let it be made known to us, and have no intercourse with him, that he may be ashamed." And again, he said afterwards: "Ye must not treat him as an enemy, but remonstrate with him like a brother." XLVII. That lovers of strife are to be admonished in one way, in another the peaceful. .

Those who sow strife are to be admonished in one way, in another the peaceful. The lovers of strife are to be admonished to consider whose followers they are. Of the expelled angel it is written in the Gospel that he sowed the weed in the good fields. Therefore it was said of him :
"An enemy of ours did this." Of the same enemy's members is thus spoken through Solomon : "An apostate is always useless, and goes with perverse mouth, and winks with the eyes, and treads with the foot, and speaks with the finger, and does evil with perverse heart, and is always sowing strife." In this passage we can hear how, when he wished to speak of the lover of strife, he called him the apostate , because, had he not formerly fallen in his thoughts from the sight of God, like the proud angel, he would not have become outwardly the seed of strife. Of whom it is rightly written that he winks with his eyes, and talks with his fingers, and treads with his foot; because the guardian, that is the will, who keeps the members externally, is inside. Therefore, when a man loses the consistency of his mind internally, he is sometimes very unsteadily agitated externally in his members, and shows by the agitation of the twigs outside that there is no stability in the root inside. But let the sowers of strife hear what is written in the Gospel; it is written: "Blessed are the peaceful, for they shall be called the children of God." From these words we can suppose that, since those who make peace are called the children of God, those are without doubt the devil's children who try to destroy it, because every one who wickedly tries to keep himself aloof from concord, will relinquish the greenness of love, and wither in dissension.

 Therefore, although he bring forth some fruit of good works, if it is not begun from good will and sincere love, it is nothing. From this let the sowers of strife consider how manifoldly they sin when they commit that single evil, and with it tear away from the human heart all good qualities. With that single evil they commit a multitude of other evils, because those who sow strife extinguish peace, which is the mother of all good qualities. Therefore no virtue is more acceptable to God than love, nor, again, any vice more pleasing to the devil than quarrelsomeness. Whoever, therefore, sows strife, and so destroys the peace of his companion, is a familiar servant of God's enemy, who is always depriving the infirm mind of the peace which he himself relinquished, and so ruined himself, till he fell down, and still wishes to block up our road, lest we ascend the path to the dignity he fell from. Those, on the contrary, who sow peace are to be admonished not to do such great works too recklessly and rashly, and especially when they do not know whether peace is better established between the two, or not; because, as much as any diminution of peace between the good is injurious, so much is it also injurious, if it is not diminished, between the bad. themselves, the bolder they will be to trouble the good. Therefore the divine voice spoke to the blessed Job about the messengers of the useless vessel, that is the accursed Antichrist ; it said : "The limbs of his his domestic servants, speaking thus : "The scale of every fish is joined to the other, so that no breath can pass out between." So also his followers, the more friendly and unanimous they are, the more closely they unite, and the more firmly they join together to annoy the good. So also he who reconciles the wicked together, supports and strengthens unrighteousness, because the more unanimously they persecute the good, the more they will be able to afflict them. Of which the noble and Sadducees unanimously persecuted him, trying to set them at variance, and spoke thus : "What ye do, brothers, do manfully. What, am I not your companion, and a Pharisee as ye are? And I am persecuted because I preach about the hope of the resurrection of the dead." He spoke thus because the Sadducees denied the resurrection after death, and the Pharisees believed in it, as the holy Scriptures tell. So he disturbed the unanimity of his persecutors, who before wished to destroy him, and escaped unhurt. Those who busy themselves with promoting peace are also to be admonished first to try and show the unwise minds what the love of inner peace ought to be, lest the outer peace injure them after a time; that, when they think of righteous love, they may also take care not to be deceived by the outer love, and when they understand the divine peace, the earthly peace may not deteriorate them. And again, when any bad men are so circumstanced as not to be able to injure the good, although they desire it, it is better to confirm earthly peace between them, until they can appreciate sublime peace; that through human peace they may ascend to divine peace, although it is yet far from them, because the evil of their unrighteousness still hardens them, that love and the society of their neighbours may humanise and reform them.

unsound. They are also to be admonished to consider that the holy Scriptures are given us as lanterns, that we may see what we are to do in this night, that is, this present life, as the lantern gives light to our eyes at night, that the Scriptures may enlighten our mind by day. But when a man cannot appreciate it properly, his light is obscured. The unrighteous mind would never have perverted him to the perverse understanding, had he not been previously inflated with pride. But when they think that they are themselves wiser than others, they do not care to follow other men after better understanding, but wish to gain by greed and hypocrisy the name of wisdom from the untaught multitude. They strive, then, with all their might to obscure that which others have rightly and sagaciously understood, and try to confirm their own unrighteousness thereby. Of which was very well spoken through the prophet Amos; he said: "They cut open the pregnant women of Gilead, to strengthen their boundaries." The people was called in Hebrew Gilead, which is in English "the heap of testimony," because the whole assembly of the holy church preserves the testimony of truth through confession. Therefore the holy assembly is very rightly signified by the name of Gilead, because all believers proclaim about God what is true. The pregnant women signify the souls which understand the commands, and receive them with divine love: if the received understanding is brought forth at the proper time, its birth is as if it were caused by the accomplished work. Extending one's boundaries is proclaiming one's name and fame. Men cut open the pregnant women in Gilead to increase their territories, when heretics with perverse doctrine slay the minds of believers, when they have received a right understanding, and truth is partially begot on them, before it is completely born, and wish so to get a reputation for wisdom by cutting out with the knife of grievous error the unborn children, who are begot with words in the minds of the faithful; but they wish to be praised for it, and accounted wise teachers. But if we wish them to cease from evil, we must teach them first and most zealously of all things, not to desire false glory, because if the root of pride is first cut away, it is evident that the twigs of unrighteous doctrine will soon wither. They are also to be admonished with their errors and discord not to pervert the law of God, which forbids us to sacrifice to devils, to idolatry. Of which the Lord spoke sadly through the prophet Hosea, saying: "I gave them wheat and wine and oil and gold and silver; I gave them enough, and they made it into idols for their god Baal." We receive the wheat from God, when we inwardly understand the law, and reveal the obscure sayings, as if we took the pure wheat, and threw away the chaff. And God gives us his wine, when he intoxicates us with the doctrine of deep understanding. And he gives us his oil, when he proclaims to us his commands more openly, and therewith leads on our life gently and softly. And he gives us much silver, when he gives us great eloquence and fair speech to preach the truth. He enriches us with gold, when he illuminates and brightens our hearts with the splendour of lofty understanding. All this is the offering of righteous men to God, but heretics bring it all to Baal, because they seduce the minds of their subjects, and pervert their whole understanding with their perverse doctrine. They make the wheat and wine, oil and silver, into idolatry, when they pervert peace and wisdom to error and discord. Therefore they are to be warned to consider carefully, that when they with perverted mind turn the commandments of peace into discord, they kill themselves with the words of life by the righteous judgment of God. On the other hand, those who are able to understand the words of the holy law properly, and yet will not humbly teach them, are to be admonished to understand themselves in the holy Scriptures before they teach others, lest they observe the deeds of others, and forget themselves, and when they have properly understood all the holy Scriptures, not to forget what is said, of the proud ; it is said : " Foolish and unskilful is the physician who desires to cure another, and knows not that he himself is wounded." Therefore, those who will not humbly teach the words of God, are to be admonished, when they wish to cure the sick, first to look to the poison of their own diseases in themselves, lest they themselves die while curing the others. They are to be admonished to consider, that they are not themselves to cause discord with the words they teach, by doing one thing and teaching another. of St. Peter ; it is written : " Whoever speaks, let him speak with the word of God, as if the words were not his, but God's." If, then, they are God's words, not his, why shall any one be proud on account of them, as if they were his own words ? But they should hear what St. Paul said to the Corinthians ; he said : " As if from God before God we speak in Christ." He speaks from God before God, who understands that he has received the words of instruction from God, and through them desires to please God, not men. They shall hear the words written in Solomon's books ; it is written that God abominates all proud men. He who seeks his own glory with God's words, wishes to deprive him who gave them to him of his authority ; and is not afraid of subordinating God to himself, although God gave

The teacher drinks the water from his own cistern, when he turns first to his own mind to draw the water, that is, to do what he teaches. He drinks from the flow of his own well, when he is himself softened and well watered with his own words. To these words were very well added what Solomon said: "Send forth thy streams, and disperse thy waters along the highroads." That is, that the teacher is first to drink of the spring of his own doctrine, and then with his instruction to pour the same water over the minds of his subjects. Sending out one's waters means, that the teacher is to water other men outwardly with the art of his instruction, until they become learned inwardly. Dispersing one's waters along the king's highways means, that we are to disperse the divine words among the multitude of the people suitably, to each according to his capacity. But since often the desire of vainglory seizes on the mind of the teacher, when he sees that the words of God which are spoken through his mouth please many, that was said which we have quoted above, through the wise Solomon, who said : "Although thou disperse thy waters, yet keep them for thyself, and give nothing of them to strangers." He meant the accursed spirits. Of whom

David spoke very positively in the Psalms, as he had often experienced, saying : "Strangers arose against me, and fought against me, and my persecutors were very strong." We said above, that Solomon said that a man ought to disperse his waters, and yet keep them all for himself. As if he had openly said : "It is very necessary that ye so apply yourselves outwardly to instruction as not to associate inwardly with the accursed spirits through pride of spirit, lest through the ministration of God's word ye allow your enemies access to yourselves ; lest ye have anything in common." But we do both ; we disperse the waters along the king's highways, and also keep them for ourselves, when we disperse instruction very widely, and yet through it desire not worldly glory.

XLIX. That those who are capable of teaching properly, and yet from great fear and humility refuse, are to be admonished in one way ; and in another those who are not yet old or take it.

Those who are capable of teaching properly, and yet from great humility are afraid, are to be admonished in one way ; in another those who are unfit for teaching either from youth or want of wisdom, and yet are impelled by their presumption and hasty zeal. Those who could teach usefully, and yet from immoderate humility avoid it, are to be admonished to understand from the lesser how much they sin in the greater. Surely they know that if their nearest friends are reduced to poverty, and they have money, and withhold it from them, they promote their poverty. Why do they not consider, if they sin in that, how much more they sin when they withhold instruction from their sinful brothers, as if they hid the medicine of life, and withheld it from the dying? Of which Solomon spoke: "Of what use is the concealed art or the hidden gold?" Or, if a nation is afflicted with famine, and any one hides and withholds his wheat, does he not desire their death? From this the teachers can understand what punishment they are worthy of, when they let souls starve for want of their words, and will not feed them with the bread of the gift they have received. Of which was very well spoken through Solomon: "He who hides his wheat is cursed by the people." Hiding the wheat is when the teacher hides the words of holy doctrine. He is accursed and condemned by the people for the one sin of silence, because he could have taught many, if he would. We can consider, that if a good physician, who well knows how to cut wounds, sees that some one has need of him, and from sloth is neglectful and withholds his help, we will say that he is very rightly guilty of his brother's death, because of his own sloth. If, then, the physicians of the body are thus held guilty, we must consider how greatly they sin who understand the wounds of the mind, and neglect to treat and cut them with their words. Of which was very well spoken through the prophet Jeremiah; he said: "Accursed is the man who keeps his sword from blood." Keeping one's sword from blood is withholding one's instruction, and not slaying with it the lusts of the flesh. Again, Moses spoke of the same : "My sword shall eat flesh." Let those also who conceal and hide within themselves the divine doctrine, hear the awful words of God which are addressed to them, that the one fear may drive out the other, telling how the money was committed to the merchant to be lent out at interest, and when he neglected to do so he got no thanks for it, and suffered great injury from it. They should also hear that St. Paul believed that he was so much the more guiltless of his neighbour's blood the less he hesitated to slay their vices. They can hear it in the words he spoke, saying : "Ye are all my witnesses that I am pure and guiltless of the blood of each of you up to this

They ought also to hear how St. John was admonished by the voice of the angel, saying to him : "He who hears one calling to him, let him call another also, and say 'Come.'" That is, that he who perceives that he is called with the divine voice, is also to draw and invite others to where he is drawn, by calling and teaching them, lest he find the door shut against him when he comes, if he comes empty-handed, and does not bring with him these he ought to invite thither. They ought to hear how the prophet Isaiah repented and blamed himself, when he was inspired with the sublime light, saying : "Woe is me that I was silent !" They ought also to hear what is promised through Solomon to the men who cheerfully and actively teach what they can, that is, that their wisdom shall be increased and multiplied. Solomon said: "The soul of the man who speaks well shall be fattened, and whoever makes another drunk shall himself be intoxicated." So also, he who externally teaches well with his words, shall receive internally fatness of mind, that is, wisdom. So also, he who does not withhold the wine of his instruction to intoxicate the minds who wish to hear him, shall also be intoxicated and well fed with draughts of various and manifold gifts. We have heard how David brought as an offering to God his not having hid the doctrine given him by God. He made it known, when he said: "Lord, thou knowest that I do not withhold my lips, and do not conceal thy righteousness in my heart; I speak out thy salvation and righteousness."

Hear also what is written in the Song of Songs, how the bridegroom spoke to the bride : "Listen here, thou who dwellest in a friend's orchard, make me able to hear thy voice." That is, the holy assembly of God's people, which lives in orchards, when they carefully tend their plants and shoots till they are full-grown. Hearing his voice is when the elect are eager to listen to his words. And the Bridegroom, that is Christ, desires to hear the voice of the bride, that is the assembly of Christians, when he calls to them through the minds of wise men, who are chosen by him, and teaches them through their mouth. They ought also to hear what Moses did, when he saw that God was angry with the people ; he bade men to take their sword to avenge God's anger, and said that those who unhesitatingly slew the sins of the guilty should be specially God's servants. He said : " Let him who is God's servant, come hither to me, and put his sword on his hip, and pass from gate to gate through the midst of the city, and let every man slay his brother and his friend and his neighbour." Putting one's sword on one's hip is preferring the zeal of instruction to the lusts of the flesh, and taking care to subdue and conquer unlawful lusts and doctrines, when one desires to teach holiness. Running from one gate to another is running with reproof from one vice to another, through which death can enter into a man's soul. Running through the middle of the city is being so impartial towards Christian people in the reproof of their sins as neither to flatter any man nor care for any man's flattery. As to which it was very rightly said, that they were to slay their brothers and friends and neighbours. A man slays his brother and his friend and his neighbour, when no relationship makes him hesitate to punish the sins of the guilty. If he is called the servant of God who is inspired by the zeal of divine love to slay vices, does not he absolutely refuse to be God's servant, who refuses to rebuke as much as he can the vices of worldly men? On the other hand, those who have neither age nor wisdom enough to be able or know how to teach, and yet hasten to undertake it, are to be warned not to block up for themselves the way of reformation, which might in time come to them, when they assume so hastily the burden of so arduous a ministration. But when they prematurely assume what they neither can nor know how to manage, they have cause to fear losing what in due time they might have attained, that is, wisdom, which they prematurely desire and display, but which very rightly proves their destruction. They can consider that young birds, if they try to fly before their wings are fully developed, are made to descend by the desire which before exalted them, till they perish. They are also to be admonished to consider that, if a big, heavy roof is placed on a new wall before it is dry and firm, not a hall, but a ruin is built. They are also to be admonished to consider, that those women who bring forth the children they have conceived before they are properly formed, fill, not houses, but tombs. Therefore Christ himself, who could easily have strengthened whom he wished, gave an example to teachers, to prevent the unlearned from teaching : when he had taught his disciples the art of teaching, he yet said : "Sit yet within the city, until ye are fully prepared with spiritual power." We sit within the city when we shut ourselves up behind the bars of our mind, lest from loquacity we wander too far. But afterwards, when we are fully prepared with the divine power, then we have come forth from the city, that is, from our own mind, to teach others. Of this same, Solomon spoke to young men : "Thou, young man, be not ready to call out and advise, not even in thine own affairs, and even when asked twice, wait with the answer until thou knowest that thy speech has both beginning and end." Therefore our Redeemer, though in heaven he is creator and teacher of angels, would not be a teacher of men on earth until he was thirty years old, because he wished to instil into presumptuous men the reverence of salutary fear ; although he himself could not sin, he would not proclaim the gift of perfect life until he was himself of complete age. It is written in the Gospel, that our Saviour, when he was twelve years old, stayed behind his mother and relations in the city of Jerusalem. And afterwards, when his relations sought him, they found him in the midst of the wisest doctors in Jerusalem, listening to their words, and asking about their doctrines. We must vigilantly consider that our Saviour, when he was twelve years old, was found sitting in the midst of the teachers, asking, not teaching ; because he wished to make it an example that the unlearned might not presume to teach, since he wished to be disciple and to be taught, the same who formerly taught those who taught him then with the power of divine authority. And again, Paul said to his disciple : "Command this, and teach, and let no man despise thy youth." We must know that adolescence is often called youth in the holy Scriptures. Which we can understand more clearly if we quote one of Solomon's sayings among the rest ; he said : "Rejoice, young man, in thy youth." If he did not consider it all one, he would not have called the young man both young man and youth.

L. That those who desire worldly honour, and possess it prosperously, are to be admonished in one way ; in another those who desire worldly honour, and when they have desired it, continue in it with great hardship and misfortune.

In one way are to be admonished those who prosperously attain all their worldly desires ; in another way those who desire the joys and wealth of this world, and yet are kept from them by adverse misfortunes. Those who always attain what they desire in this world are to be admonished not to neglect, when they have attained it all, to seek him who helps them to it all ; lest they love this exile more than their own country, and fix their affections on what is lent them here ; and lest the comforts and pleasures of their journey seduce them, so that they forget whither they are bound ; and lest, for the fair moon that they see by night, they despise the brightness of day and of the sun. They are also to be admonished not to believe that the pleasures and comforts which happen to them in this world are the rewards intended for them by God, but are the consolation of the miseries ; while the rewards of the good we do are in the eternal life. Therefore we must fortify our minds against the flatteries of this world, lest we love them with our whole heart, and subject ourselves to them entirely. But he who does not overcome the prosperity he has here with prudence of mind, and love of the better life, makes of the flatteries of this transitory world his own eternal death. Therefore the prophet Ezekiel rebuked the people of Israel, and said that they would be destroyed and vanquished with prosperity, as the Idumæans were, because they rejoiced too much in the prosperity of this world. But the Lord rebuked them through the prophet, saying : "They made my land their inheritance with joy, and with all their heart and mind." From these words we can understand that they were very severely blamed, not because they rejoiced, but because they rejoiced with all their heart and mind. Of which Solomon said : "The folly of the young kills them, and the prosperity of fools destroys them." Of the same St. Paul spoke : "Let those who have be as if they had nothing, and those who enjoy this world as if they enjoyed it not." That we may so love this outward and earthly support, as not to avert our minds from the desire and zeal of divine love, lest that which is lent to us in this present exile as a support and mercy cause us mourning and exile from eternal life; that we may not rejoice as if we were glad of these transitory things, when we see, while among them, how poor we are in eternal things. Of the same Solomon spoke in the book of Song of Songs concerning the holy assembly, saying: "The Lord's left hand is under my head, and his right hand embraces me." He said that God's left hand was under his head. That signifies prosperity of this present life. The inner love of sublime life presses the hand. The right hand embraces him, when he holds him in such a desire that he loves the eternal life with all devotion. Again, it was said through the wise Solomon that in his right hand was long life, and in his left wealth and honour. When he compared wealth and honour with the left hand, he taught us how to love each. Again, of the same the Psalmist spoke: "May thy right hand save me." He did not say "thy left hand," but "thy right." He thus showed that he did not mean this present life, but sought the salvation of eternal life. Of the same is again written in Exodus, the book of Moses; it is written: "Thy right hand, O Lord, has crushed thy foes." Those who are God's enemies, though they prosper on the left, are crushed with the right hand; that is, that this present life often exalts the wicked, but the coming of eternal bliss casts them down. Therefore those who live prosperously in this world are to be admonished to consider carefully that the prosperity of this present life is sometimes lent, that through it they may be led to a better life, sometimes that their confusion may be the greater in eternity. Why else was the land of Canaan promised to the people of Israel, but because the untaught people would not believe in the promise of a distant land after a time, unless he who promised them the greater land gave them a near one at once? And also that they might ~~the more~~ more firmly and certainly believe in the eternal things, whenever he promised them to them; lest he should attract them to the gift with the promises and hope alone, but also with the gift he drew them to the hope. That also the Psalmist proclaimed very openly, saying: "He gave them kingdoms of other races, and they possessed the wealth of many nations, that they might preserve righteousness and seek his law." But when the human mind responds not to God's kindness with good works, he is very justly degraded with that wherewith he is thought to be honoured. Of which was again spoken through the Psalmist: "Thou didst humiliate them when they exalted themselves." So, when useless men will not requite the divine gift with righteous works, but try to destroy themselves altogether here with the pride of abundant wealth and prosperity, what outwardly exalts them, inwardly makes them fall. About this same it was also said of the rich man, of whom it was said that he suffered in hell; it was said: "Thou hast received all thy good here in the world." The evil man receives a portion of good in this world, that he may hereafter receive the more evil in the future life, if here he would not for the good turn to God. Those, on the contrary, who desire the joys and wealth of this world, and yet are debarred from them, and afflicted in this world by adversity, are to be admonished to consider carefully with how great favour the Creator and Ruler of all creation watches over them, when he does not leave them to their own desires; as the physician, when he has no hope of the patient, and thinks that he cannot help him, allows him to do and take whatever he likes; but him whom he thinks he can help, he debars from very many of his desires. We even debar our children from playing with our money, those same children to whom we hereafter intend to leave our lands and estates and inheritance altogether, and make our heirs. So let those who are humbled by the adversities of this present world, learn from this example to rejoice and hope in the eternal inheritance: if God had not resolved to save them in eternity, he would not have bridled them with such severe reproof of his instruction. Those who desire these transitory things, and yet are debarred from them by misfortune and adversity, are also to be admonished to consider carefully that righteous men are often exalted with transitory authority, till through their authority they are caught by sins as in a snare; as we said above in this same book of David, God's favourite, that he was a better man when a subject than when king. When he was a subject, he met his enemy, and yet for the fear of God and love of righteousness, he durst not slay him. But afterwards, when king, by the advice and encouragement of his own lust, he slew and circumvented his faithful officer. Who, then, can desire possessions or authority or honour without danger, since he who desired them not fell into such danger? Who can be saved from such things without great difficulty and danger, if he whom God himself chose for king fell into such a sin when king? They are also to be admonished to consider how it is written about Solomon, how, after being so wise, he fell, even until he began to sacrifice to idols. It is not said that he had any adversity in this world before he fell; but when wisdom was entirely granted to him, he forgot himself, and the science and discipline he had learnt, so that he would not have any trouble with it, either less or more.

LI. That those who are bound in marriage are to be admonished in one way, in another those who are free from those ties.

Those who are bound in marriage are to be admonished in one way, in another those who are free from those ties. Those who are bound by those ties are to be admonished, when they mutually think how to please one another, each of them to try so to please the other in their union, as not to displease their Creator; and so to perform earthly works, as not to neglect desiring those of God; and so to rejoice in present good, as to dread seriously eternal evils; and so also to lament the evils of this world, as yet to fix their entire hope on eternal good; and when they perceive how fleeting are their present works, and how lasting is that which they desire, to let no worldly evil break their spirit, nor any good deceive them, but let the joy of heavenly good fortify them against affliction; and, again, to let the expectation of coming evil at the future judgment alarm them in their prosperity ; because the mind of the Christian consorts, which is both firm and infirm, and cannot fully despise these transitory things, can yet associate with the eternal with its aspirations, although it still lies in the lusts of the flesh, by fortifying and filling itself with lofty hope. And although he have with him something of earthly and human habits on the road—the road is this present life—he must not relinquish the hope of attaining to God for his good will ; and yet let him not accomplish altogether the desire of the body, lest he altogether fall from that whence he ought to derive his most certain hopes. Of which Paul treated very well in few words in his Letter to the Corinthians, saying : “ Let these who have wives be as if they had none, and those who weep as if they wept not, and those who rejoice as if they rejoiced not.” He has a wife as if he had none, who has her for bodily solace, and yet for the enjoyment and love does not turn from better works. He also has a wife as if he had none, who understands that all these pleasant things are transitory, and yet for necessity takes care of his flesh, and however with great desire of the spirit yearns for the eternal joy. A man weeps and yet does not weep, when he bewails the miseries of this world, and yet knows that he shall be comforted, and rejoice in eternal joy. And, again, a man rejoices and yet does not rejoice, when he exalts his mind from these earthly to heavenly things, and yet does not relinquish the fear of falling from the lofty to the lower things. About which St. Paul discoursed very well immediately after, saying : “ The face of this world shall pass away.” As if he had openly said : “ Ye must not at all love this world too much, because, although ye love it, it cannot always last : ye fix your affections on it in vain, because it will elude you, although ye love it as if it were lasting.” The married are to be admonished, although they be sometimes displeased at something in one another, to tolerate it patiently ; and let each of them pray for the other, that through it they may be saved, because it is written : “ Bear your burdens in common among yourselves, then will ye fulfil God’s law.” Love is God’s law ; the law and love bring us much good from Christ, and bear patiently with our evil. We imitate Christ, and also carry out the imitation, when we cheerfully give to others what God gives us, and patiently bear with their evil. The married, and also every one else, are to be admonished not to think less of what other men bear with and tolerate in them, than of what they bear with in others; because he can much the more easily endure the injuries done to him by others, if he will remember those he does to others. The married are also to be admonished to remember that they are not associated for any other purpose than the procreation of children. Therefore they ought to consider that, if they associate too often and too immoderately, they are not in lawful union, if they make a habit of it; but, because they defile their lawful union with unlawful intercourse, it is very necessary that they efface the sin with frequent prayer. Therefore the skilful physician of the heavenly medicine, that is St. Paul, both taught the sound and showed the unsound a remedy, saying: "It is good for a man to be without a wife." And again he said: "It is good for men that each have his own wife, and each wife her husband, lest they commit fornication." He did both; he both inspired with fear those who committed fornication, and gave permission to those who could not forego it, that those who could not stand, if they had to fall, might fall on the soft bed of marriage, not on the hard earth of fornication. And, again, he said to the weak: "Let the husband give his wife her due in their union, and in like manner the wife to her husband." But after he had given some fitting leave to the married to do their will, he said: "I do not say what I said before, commanding, but advising and permitting." He spoke very much as if it were a sin, when he said he would allow and permit it. The sin is the sooner healed because it is not unlawful; but, although lawful, it is not to be committed too often. Which Lot signified for us very well in himself, when he fled from the burning city of Sodom, and came to Zoar, when he durst not hastily withdraw from the city up into the mountains. When he fled from the burning city of Sodom, he showed that we are to flee from the unlawful heat of our bodies. The height of the mountains signifies the purity of continence. Those dwell, as it were, up in the mountains, who are yoked in marriage, and yet have no intercourse except when they wish to beget children. They stand up in the mountain, when the flesh seeks nothing from the other but progeny. Standing on the mountain is when the flesh is not carnally united to the other. But there are many who abstain from fornication, and yet do not associate with their own consorts as properly as they ought to do. Lot departed from Sodom to Zoar, and yet did not quickly ascend the mountains. So, when a man relinquishes the worst life, without however being able yet to attain to the best, nor preserve the continence of high union, it is like Zoar standing midway between the mountains and the marshes where Sodom was. Zoar saved Lot, when a fugitive. So does the Zoar of the most excellent life: those who flee to it it saves. But when the married associate with excessive incontinence, when they avoid the fall of sin, they can yet be saved very easily by forgiveness and prayer, as Lot found the little city, and protected himself therein against the fire. The life of the married, though its power of withstanding worldly desires is nothing very wonderful, can yet be free from the apprehension of any punishments. Therefore Lot said to the angel: "Here is a little city very near, wherein I can preserve my life. It is a little one, and yet I can live in it." He said it was very near, and yet enough to secure his preservation. So is the life of the married. It is not far separated from this world, nor yet at all alienated from eternal salvation; because they are excused in their dealings with one another with frequent prayers for one another, as if they were shut up in a little city. Of which was very rightly spoken through the angel to Lot: "I will now receive thy prayer, and at thy request I will not destroy the city thou intercedest for." So is the life of the married. It is not condemned before God, if prayers follow. About the same prayers St. Paul admonished, speaking thus: "Let neither of you deprive the other against his or her will without consent, when either of you wish to pray, but keep yourselves free for prayers." On the other hand, those who are not bound with matrimony are to be admonished to keep the heavenly commands the more rightly, the less troubled they are with the cares of this world, because no yoke of carnal union inclines them to this world, nor does lawful union oppress them. It is very necessary, therefore, for them not to be oppressed by the unlawful burden of these earthly cares, that the last day, when it comes, may find them so much the more ready, the more disengaged they are; and that, when they are disengaged so as to be able to do better than others, and yet neglect it, they may not thereby merit a severer punishment than other men. They ought to hear what St. Paul said, when he exhorted men to the grace of serving God; yet he did not say so because he blamed marriage, but because he wished to expel from the minds of his subjects the cares which grow out of marriage. He said: "This I speak for your benefit, lest I catch you in any snare. I tell you what is most honourable for you to do, and how ye can most fully serve God with the least impediment." Because earthly troubles and cares grow out of marriage, the noble teacher of nations incited his subjects to a better life, lest they should be bound with earthly cares; because, when the servant of God lets himself be impeded by worldly cares, although he has avoided marriage, he has not escaped its burdens. The servants of God are also to be admonished not to think that they can associate with unmarried women without the injury of severe damnation, since Paul denounced the evil of fornication among so many accursed vices. He proclaimed what the sin is, when he said: "Neither fornicators, nor idolaters, nor the inconstant, who cannot cease from their fornication, nor thieves, nor the avaricious, nor drunkards, nor swearers, nor robbers, shall possess the kingdom of God." And, again, he said: "Adulterers the Lord shall judge." Therefore they are to be admonished, if they cannot preserve salutary continence, and cannot endure the storms of temptation, to desire the harbour of wedlock; for it is written that it is better to marry than to burn, because they can marry without sin, unless they had previously renounced it. But he who promises more good than he previously did, makes the lesser good unlawful that he formerly did. It is written in the Gospel that no man is to put his hand on the plough and look back. Still less is he who makes a vow to think he is ever the nearer to the kingdom of heaven, if he retract his vow. Therefore he who pledges himself to the greater good, and then relinquishes it, and turns to the lesser, is manifestly overcome by looking back.

LII. That those who have tried the sins of the flesh are to be admonished in one way, in another those who know nothing of them.

In one way are to be admonished those who perceive and know the sins of their bodies, in another those who know them not. Those who have tried the sins of their bodies are to be admonished at least to dread the sea after the shipwreck, and to shun the perdition which follows their danger, when they know it; that those who are mercifully preserved after committing sins, may not unwarily return to them and perish. Therefore it is said to the sinful soul, which will never cease from its sins: "Thou hast the countenance of an harlot, because thou hast no shame." Yet they are to be warned to be very careful, although they would not preserve their natural goodness entire, at least to mend it when broken. They have need to consider how great a multitude there is of the faithful, who both preserve themselves pure, and also turn others from their errors. But what will they say when the others stand in complete safety, while they will not reform after their evil deeds? Or what will they say, when the others bring both themselves, and others with their example, to the kingdom of heaven; while they, when God gives them a respite, and bears with their evil, will not even bring themselves? They are to be admonished to remember what good, that they could have done, they formerly relinquished, that they may at least avoid the present evil. Concerning which the Lord spoke to the wounded minds through the prophet Ezekiel, as if he spoke to the Jews, and reminded them of the sins they had committed, because he wished them to be ashamed of being afterwards impure in the other world; he said that they committed whoredom in Egypt in their youth: "There they committed whoredom, there were their breasts softened, and the paps of their virginity bruised." Their breasts are softened in Egypt, when they submit to the shameful lusts of this world with the desire of their hearts. And again, the paps of their virginity are bruised in Egypt, when their natural sense is at first entire and uninjured for a time, until it is polluted by the oppression and laceration of unrighteous desires. Therefore those who have tried their sins are to be admonished to understand vigilantly with how great good will the Lord spreads out the lap of his mercy for those who turn to him after their sins. As he spoke through the prophet Jeremiah; he said: "If any woman leaves her husband and takes to her another, thinkest thou that he will ever care for her again, or that she will ever be able to return to him as pure as she was before? Behold, thou hast committed whoredom with many a lover, and yet I say: 'Return to me,' said the Lord." He pronounced the most righteous judgment on the whorish and repudiated woman, and yet proclaimed to us, that if we came to him after the fall of our sins, his mercy would be ready for us, not his justice. From these words we can understand that, since he spares us with such great mercy, that when we sin, and even after the sin will not turn to him, we sin again with great folly, since God's mercy towards the foolish is so great, that he is never tired of calling them to him, after they have sinned. Of the mercy after the invitation is very well spoken through the prophet Isaiah; it is said to the perverse man: "Thine eyes shall see him who commands thee, and thine ears shall hear behind thee." All mankind, when first created in Paradise, were inclined to God; and he admonished them in his presence, and granted them freedom of action, and directed them what they were to do with it, and what not to do. Then men still remained inclined to him. But they turned their backs to him, when they presumptuously despised his commands. And yet, although they despised him, he did not despise or forsake them: that he showed when he gave them a law, and invited them home with it, and often sent his angels to entice us home to him, and himself appeared in this mortal flesh. When he did all this, he stood turned towards us, and called after us, though we had turned away from him; and although he was despised, he invited us back to his favour. But as we have now said this of all men, so each man can apply it to himself individually, because every man who understands what he commands and forbids, stands, as it were, before him, before he sins. He still stands before him, when he does not despise him, but for fear of him refrains from sinning. But when he relinquishes his goodness and innocence, and chooses and commits unrighteousness, he turns his back to him. But yet God still follows him, and calls after him, when he admonishes him, after the sin is committed, and entices him to turn to him. He will not see the sins, and calls the departing one, and spreads out the lap of his mercy and consolation to those who return to him. We hear behind us the voice of the admonisher, when we turn to him, when he calls us even after we have sinned, and calls after us, although before we would not attend to his instruction. We ought to feel ashamed, when he calls after us, if we will not fear his justice, because we despise him with the more injustice and folly, the less he scorns still to entice us to him, after we have despised him. Those, on the contrary, who have not yet tried carnal sins, are to be admonished to dread the destructive fall so much the more than others the higher they stand than the others. They are to be warned to know that when they stand in their place more darts and arrows of their enemies assail them. Therefore they perceive that they are being attacked so much the more, the weaker they see themselves to be in their bodies. But if they withstand them, they will perceive so much the greater victory in themselves, the more difficult it was for them to hold out. But they are to be admonished to desire the rewards unceasingly, and to despise and suffer cheerfully the labour of the temptations they endure, and believe without doubt in the rewards; because, if they think of the endless joys which are to come to them after their labours, the temporary labours will seem to be the lighter. They should hear what is said through the prophet Isaiah; he said: "This says the Lord: 'To the eunuchs who observe my day of rest, and choose what I will, and preserve my friendship, I will give in my house, and within my walls, a dwelling and a better name than to my other sons or daughters.'" What else signify the eunuchs but those who subdue the impulse of carnal lust, and cut away from themselves unrighteous works? To these men is proclaimed what a place they are to have before our father, as we said above, they are to have eternal mansions in the Father's house in preference to his own children. They shall hear what was said through St. John; he said: "These are they who have not been defiled with women, and have preserved their virginity; they shall follow the Lamb, wherever it goes." They shall sing the song which none else can sing but the 144,000. They will have to sing a special song with the Lamb in eternity before all believers, and rejoice in the purity of their flesh, so that the other elect may be able to hear the song, although they cannot sing it so, and that for the love they bear to them, and the honour they see that they have, they may rejoice, and be as glad as they, although they have not merited the same honour. Let those who have not tried carnal sins also hear what Truth of itself said about purity; it said: "All men do not receive this doctrine." With these words he showed that it is the highest excellence, because he said that all did not receive it, and also said that it was difficult to keep, and also showed how carefully they were to keep it when they had received it. Those who have not tried the sins of the body are also to be admonished to know that virginity is higher than marriage, and yet they are to be instructed not to exalt themselves above the others; but to rank the life of virginity above the others, and themselves below, and yet not to relinquish the life which they know to be better, and to beware of vainly exalting themselves. They are to be admonished to understand that the life of the married surpasses the life of virginity, when they undertake to practise both continence and humility over and above their vows, and the others do not even practise the duties of their own order. Of which was very well spoken through the prophet Isaiah to the city called Sidon, which stood by the sea; then said the prophet: "The sea tells thee to be ashamed of thyself, Sidon." As if the city were ashamed at the sea's voice. So this earthly life often fluctuates like the sea, and yet is often very estimable, and the other is very contemptible, which ought to be firmer and stronger. Often many return to God after committing the sins of the flesh, and then establish themselves so much the more firmly in good works the more sinful they perceive themselves to be. And often those who have preserved their bodies in purity, the less they perceive in themselves of what they need repent, think the more that the purity of their life will suffice them, when their minds are not inflamed with any admonition of repentance. Therefore the life which after its sins is inflamed with repentance, becomes often dearer to God than that which is pure and innocent from sloth and luxury. About which the voice of the Judge, that is Christ, spoke of Mary the harlot: "Very many sins are forgiven her, because she repented greatly." And again, he said: "There will be greater joy in heaven because of one who repents than over ninety-nine righteous men who need not repentance." We shall be able to understand it the more clearly and quickly by our own habits, if we will consider the judgment of our own mind. We know that we love the field which was formerly choked with thorns, and after the thorns are cut down, and the field ploughed, yields good fruit, more than that which stands in open land, and is barren or bears worthless or empty corn. Those who have not tried the sins of the flesh are also to be admonished not to think that because of their purity they are before the higher orders, for they do not know whether they are behind those who are of less rank, while they think that they ought to be before them; because in the judgment of the righteous Judge merit annuls rank and distinction. For who is there, who is wise and experienced enough to distinguish such things, who does not know that in the class of gems the carbuncle is more precious than the jacinth? And yet the colour of the blue jacinth is better than that of the pale carbuncle; because that which its rank and nature denies to the jacinth, the beauty of its brightness supplies, and, on the other hand, the carbuncle, although exalted by its nature and rank, is degraded by its colour. So there are among mankind many of better order and rank, who are worse, and of worse order and rank, better; so that often a man of lay order and garb surpasses those of monastic order by the goodness of his works and the righteousness of his life, while the others, who are of higher order, by not striving to follow morality and a meritorious life, degrade and defile their order.

LIII. That those who bewail the sins they have committed are to be admonished in one way, in another those who bewail those they have meditated.

Those who bewail the sins they have committed are to be admonished in one way, in another those who bewail those that they have meditated. Those are to be admonished who bewail the sins they have committed, to wash away the evil they have committed with perfect repentance, lest they be too tightly bound with the sins they have committed, and then delay too long unbinding themselves with repentance. Of which is written in the seventy-ninth Psalm: "God gave us to drink very moderately with tears," that every man's heart should be so much the oftener moistened by the tears of repentance, the oftener he remembered that it had been dried by God with his sins. They are also to be admonished to bring the sins they have committed indefatigably before their mind's eye, and when they have seen them, to prevent them being seen at the severe examination. Of which David spoke in the Psalms: "Turn, Lord, thine eyes from my sins." And a little before he said: "My misdeeds are always before me." As if he had said: "I pray thee not to look at my sins, because I myself look at them always." Of which the Lord also spoke through the prophet Isaiah: "I will not remember thy sins, but do thou remember them." Therefore they are to be admonished to think of each sin that they can remember, because when they repent of each one they repent of all. Of which is very well spoken through Jeremiah the prophet, when he recounted all the misdeeds of the Jews; he said: "Mine eyes let out the divisions of the waters." We let the divided waters out of our eyes, when we separately repent of separate sins: because we cannot always repent of all at once with equal contrition, but sometimes one, sometimes another, is painfully remembered; and when they are moved by the one, they are purified of them all. They are also to be admonished to believe and confidently trust that they will have forgiveness for their intended repentance, lest they be too excessively oppressed by repentance. The merciful Lord would never have caused or brought into his mind such repentance, if he wished afterwards to punish it with any severity. He proclaimed, very mercifully, that he would not judge them, when he made them to judge themselves before. Of which is written in the ninety-fourth Psalm ; it is said : " Let us anticipate his judgment with confession." And again, it was said through St. Paul . " When we judged ourselves, God judged us not." But they are to be admonished so to hope for forgiveness as not in their security unwarily to become torpid. Because often the cunning devil, after deceiving the mind with the sin, when he sees that it is sad because of its sinful fall, allures it with pernicious flattery. This was signified by the example of the treatment of Dinah, the daughter of Jacob. It is written, that Dinah went out to see the women of the land. Then Shechem, the son of Hamor the Hebrew, who was prince of the land, saw her, and she pleased him, and he took her by force, and lay with her. And his heart was attached to the maiden, and as she was very sad, he soothed and enticed her to him. Dinah goes out to see the foreign women, when any man's mind leaves its own occupations, and busies itself with other men's affairs, which do not in the least concern it, and so goes wandering out of its order and station. Shechem, the prince of the land, forced the maiden Dinah, when he found her wandering about thus. So does the devil with the mind that he finds unprofitably occupied : he seduces it. Shechem's heart was attached to Dinah. So the devil, when he sees the mind with the same unrighteous desires as himself, and afterwards sees that it repents of them, brings before the eyes of the mind vain security and hope, to divert it from its beneficial sadness. About which was very rightly said, that Shechem gently soothed Dinah, after grieving her. So does the devil with the mind : sometimes he makes it think that what it does is no sin ; sometimes he makes it think that, although it is a sin, others sin more gravely ; sometimes it is over-confident of God's mercy ; sometimes it thinks it has time enough to repent. And when the deceived mind thinks so, it is hindered from repenting inwardly. so that it obtains no good, because it repents of no evil.

But it is so much the more deceived with punishments, the more it now rejoices in its evil ways. On the other hand, those are to be admonished who bewail the sins they have meditated, to take careful heed in the secret recesses of their mind, whether the thought comes to them from sudden pleasure or desire and consent, of sinning so. For it often happens that the mind is tempted by fleshly lusts, and yet the mind resists the fleshly lusts, so that the same lusts which afflict him in the secret recesses of his heart, will afflict him again, if he withstand them. Often also the mind is pursued by such deep temptation, and is so swallowed up by it, that it does not withstand it with any opposition, but submits, and yields to the temptation. When it is excited by pleasure, and has opportunity for such things, it quickly forsakes the works of the internal good desire, when it has opportunity for outer things. But when the just judgment of the severe Judge sees it, it is not regarded as a meditated, but as a committed sin. Because that which he had no opportunity of carrying out externally with works, he sanctioned internally, and accomplished with the work of complete inclination. We have learnt from our progenitor Adam, that from him it is our nature to accomplish all evil in three ways: through suggestion, delectation, and consent. Suggestion is caused by the devil; delectation by the body; consent is accomplished by the spirit. The waylayer, that is the devil, seduces him. Then the body subdues him by delectation, till the spirit is overcome by the delectation, so that it allows it. As the serpent in Paradise first suggested evil to Eve, and Eve allowed herself to be subdued by delectation, like the body. Then was Adam, like the spirit, overcome by the serpent's suggestion and Eve's delectation, so that he consented to the sin. By the suggestion we can recognise the sin, we are forced by the delectation, and bound by the consent. Those who repent the meditated sins, are to be admonished to consider carefully into which sins they have fallen, that they may be able to compensate it by repenting to the same degree as they perceive that they have sinned in thought, lest they repent so little the meditated sins, till they accomplish them. And yet we must do worse. For often the merciful Lord very quickly washes away the meditated sins, when he does not allow them to carry them out. By which they may know that they are quickly forgiven, when he does not allow them to attain to the deed for which he would be obliged to judge them more severely. Of which it is very well said through the Psalmist in the thirty-first Psalm ; he said : "I will pronounce against myself my injustice, Lord, because thou hast forgiven the impiety of my heart." He had committed to God his sins, when he determined to confess to him. The prophet showed how easily the meditated sin can be forgiven, when he said that it was forgiven him as soon as he had resolved to confess it. He said that the same thing that he had determined to ask had been previously forgiven him. Since the sin was not carried out in practice, the repentance did not amount to suffering, but the meditated repentance wipes away the meditated sin from the mind.

LIV. That those who bewail the sins they have committed, and yet do not leave them off, are to be admonished in one way ; in another way those who do not repent of them, and yet leave them off.

Those who bewail the sins they have committed, and yet do not leave them off, are to be admonished in one way ; in another way those who leave them off, and yet do not repent of them. Those who bewail the sins they have done, and yet do not leave them off, are to be admonished to consider carefully that they strive in vain to purify themselves with mourning, when they defile themselves again by living unrighteously ; as if they washed themselves with repentance to be able to make themselves dirty again. Therefore it is written that the dog will eat what he formerly vomited, and the sow wallow in her mire after being washed. The dog does not hesitate to vomit up the food that is heavy on his chest, and afterwards devours the same thing that he vomited because it burdened him, and so the same thing burdens him that formerly relieved him. So it is with those who repent of the evils they have done, when they cast out with repentance the evil with which the stomach of their mind was perniciously and oppressively crammed, and then resume and take in after repentance the same evil that they formerly threw up with confession and repentance. As the hog, although washed, if it returns to the mire, is dirtier than it was before, and the washing is of no avail, although it was washed before; so it is with him who bewails the sins he has done, and yet does not give them up: he subjects himself to severer guilt and punishment if he does not give them up. He despised the forgiveness he had obtained by repentance, by wallowing in the muddy water; and that which he cleaned with repentance he soiled again before the eyes of God. Therefore it is again written in the books of Solomon; it is written: "Repeat not thy words in thy prayer." Repeating one's words in one's prayer is making repentance again necessary after repentance. Therefore it is again said through the prophet Isaiah; he said: "Wash, that ye may be clean." He does not care whether he is clean or not, who after repentance will not conduct himself virtuously and purely: they are always washing and are never clean, although they are always weeping; they are always weeping, and after their weeping they bring on themselves the necessity of weeping again. Therefore it is said by a certain sage: "If a man takes in his hand anything unclean, and then washes, and takes hold of the same thing again, what avails him his previous washing?" He is washed clean who washes away his impurity with repentance. He handles the impurity again who sins after his repentance. Those who repent of the sins they have done, and yet do not give them up, are to be admonished to perceive that before the eyes of the hidden Judge they are like those men who behave very humbly before great men, and flatter them excessively as long as they are in their presence, and afterwards, when they are behind their backs, injure them and are as hostile to them as they can be. What is repenting of one's sins but showing God one's humility and fidelity and obedience? Or what is sinning after repentance but behaving with hostility and pride and disobedience to the same God whom he formerly flattered? As James the apostle said, saying: "Whoever desires too excessively to be a friend to this world is called God's enemy." Those who bewail the sins they have committed, without leaving them off, are to be admonished to understand that the repentance of wicked men is often very vain and useless, when they do not afterwards try either to do good or relinquish evil. So, also, the evil thoughts of the good are very often without sin, when they do not carry them out in works. So wondrously divine wisdom dispenses and measures according to the merits of each, that the wicked, amidst all their wickedness which they fully perpetrate, become presumptuous, and exalt themselves with pride for the little good that they meditate, and do not attempt to perform. And again, the good, when disturbed by bad thoughts, which they never wish to carry out, are humbled, and despise themselves because of the little evil, and lose not at all thereby their righteousness, but increase it with their humility. Therefore Balaam said, when he saw the encampments of the righteous Israelites : "Let my life become like that of these righteous men, and my end like theirs." But afterwards, when the compunction left him, he devised a very wicked counsel and plot against their life : he forgot his affection towards the Israelites because avarice seized on him. And St. Paul said that he saw a different habit and will in his members, opposed to the will of his spirit, which led him away captive in sinful habits. He said that it was in his members. Paul was tempted with the weakness of his spirit that he might perceive his sins, and be so much the stronger in good works. Why is the sinful man touched with repentance, and is none the more righteous ; or why is the righteous man tempted with evil thoughts, and yet is not defiled with the sin ; but because his good thoughts avail the sinful man nought, because he has not a ready and unhesitating desire of the deed, and again, his evil thoughts injure not the righteous man, because he has not a ready will to accomplish the perverse deed ? On the other hand, those who relinquish their sins without atoning for or repenting of them, are to be admonished not to think that, if they relinquish their sins, God will condone them, if they do not in any way atone for or repent of them. So the scribe, unless he erases what he wrote before, even if he never write anything more, that which he wrote before is still unerased. So, also, he who speaks of or treats another injuriously, even if he ceases, and never does it again, what he did is done and unatoned for, unless he gives satisfaction. But he must moderate his insolent words with humble words, if he wishes to be reconciled with the other. Do you think, if a man owes another something, that he can secure himself by not receiving anything more from him, without paying back what he received before? So it is with God and us, when we sin against him: even if we never do so again, unless we somehow atone for and repent of what we have done, we are not sure, unless we are displeased with what formerly pleased us, that it will be forgiven us, although we do no evil now in this world. We must not, however, on that account be too confident, if we do no good, because we often entertain very many unlawful thoughts. How can he, therefore, be confident, who himself knows that he sins? What satisfaction does God get from our punishment, or honour from our sufferings, but that he wishes to heal the wounds of our sins with a potent remedy, if he cannot with a mild one, that repentance may seem bitter to us, as sins formerly seemed sweet to us? And as we formerly inclined to what is unlawful, until we fell, so we must forego what is lawful, until we arise; that the mind which was occupied with unrighteous joy may be afterwards occupied with salutary and righteous repentance, so that the mind which was wounded by pride and insolence may be afterwards healed by humility and self-reproach. Therefore David said in the seventy-fourth Psalm: "I said to the unrighteous, 'behave not unrighteously,' and said to those who sinned, 'exalt not your horns too much.'" The sinful exalt their horns excessively, when they never try to humble themselves so as to see their unrighteousness and repent of it. Therefore it was again said in the fiftieth Psalm: "The Lord does not despise the afflicted and humbled hearts." Whoever, therefore, repents of his sins, and yet relinquishes them not, afflicts the heart, and yet scorns to humble it. And he who relinquishes his sins without repenting of them, humbles himself without afflicting his heart. Therefore St. Paul said in his Epistle to the Corinthians, saying: "Ye were formerly engaged in evil works, but ye are now purified and hallowed;" because every man is purer after repenting of his sins than he was before he sinned. Therefore St. Peter said, when he saw many men in despair because of their former evil deeds, saying: "Let each of you repent and be baptized." He first directed them to repent, and then to be baptized ; as if he had said : " First repent in your mind, and then, after a time, wash and purify yourselves with your tears." How can he feel secure from the punishment of his sins who now neglects to repent of them ? How can he feel secure as to them, when the chief shepherd of the holy church has said that repentance should precede baptism ? Baptism purifies a man from his sins, and is the most powerful means of extinguishing sins.

LV. That those who praise their unlawful deeds are to be admonished in one way ; in another those who blame, and yet do them.

In one way are to be admonished those who praise what is unlawful, and also do it ; in another those who blame, and yet do it. Those who both do and praise it are to be admonished to understand that they often sin more with words than deeds ; because, when they do evil they do it for themselves alone, but when they praise it they teach it to all who hear it praised. Therefore they are to be admonished, when they simulate the desire of suppressing evil in themselves, not to presume to sow it in other men, but be satisfied with having done it themselves. And again, they are to be admonished, although they are not afraid of being evil, at least to be ashamed of men knowing what they are. For the concealed evil is often transitory, because, when the mind is ashamed of men knowing it, it can easily happen at some time or other that he is also ashamed of doing it. The more unblushingly every unrighteous man displays his wickedness, the more freely he perpetrates it, and the more lawful it seems to him. And the more lawful it seems to him, the deeper he plunges into it. Therefore it is written in the books of Isaiah : " They proclaimed their sins as the men of Sodom did, and did not conceal them." If the men of Sodom had concealed their sins, they would not have sinned without fear, but they entirely relinquished the bridle of fear, when they cared not whether it was day or night when they sinned. Therefore it is again written in Genesis that the shouting of the men of Sodom and Gomorrah was greatly multiplied. He calls who sins secretly ; but he shouts who sins openly and recklessly. Those, on the other hand, who detest their sins without, however, relinquishing them, are to be admonished to consider cautiously how they are to clear themselves at the great judgment, when they will not clear themselves here by judging themselves, and punishing their own sins in themselves. What are they but hypocrites, when they blame what they will not relinquish ? But they are to be admonished to understand that it is the secret judgment of God, that they are afterwards to have the more punishment the more accurately they know that they are doing wrong, and yet will not cease, or make any exertions to enable them to relinquish it. The more clearly they know it, the greater their ruin, because they received the light of understanding, and yet would not relinquish the darkness of the wicked deed, but neglected the understanding that God sent them as a help. The same understanding will afterwards give testimony of their wickedness at the judgment, and that which was sent them before to destroy their sins with will increase their punishments. But because they sin here without repenting of it, some punishment affects them here before the eternal punishments, that they may not be free or without care in the expectation of the greater punishment. But the more accurately they know here that they are doing evil, and yet will not relinquish it, the greater punishment they will receive there. Therefore Christ spoke in his Gospel : " The servant who knows his lord's will, and will not act according to his lord's will, is worthy of many punishments." Of the same also the Psalmist spoke in the fifty-fourth Psalm, saying : " They shall go living into hell." The living know and understand what is being done with them ; the dead cannot know anything. They are called dead, and descend into hell, who do not know when they are doing wrong ; but those who know, and yet do it, go living and conscious into hell.

LVI. That those who are very quickly overcome by an unrighteous desire are to be admonished in one way ; in another way those who consider it a long time before, and finally perpetrate it.

are so deceived. Those who are deceived by sudden desire are to be admonished to understand that every day they are in the fight of this present life. But the mind which cannot see the arrow before it is wounded, requires to hold always with its hand the shield of the fear of God, and always to dread the unseen missiles of the treacherous foe, and cautiously protect himself within the fortress of his mind against nocturnal assaults, because they will always fight in darkness. But the mind which is not always careful to defend itself, is open in some quarter to be wounded; because the cunning foe wounds the mind so much the more easily the more bare he perceives it to be of the breastplate of caution. Therefore those who are overcome by sudden desire, are to be warned not to be too solicitous about earthly considerations, because they cannot understand with how many vices they are wounded, while they think too much of earthly things. Therefore Solomon said, that the man who was wounded while asleep says: "They wounded me without my feeling it; they dragged me without my knowing it; and as soon as I awoke I again desired wine." The mind is so wounded while asleep as not to feel it, when it is too heedless of its own wants. The mind which is saturated with vices cannot perceive future evils, and does not even know of those it does. It is dragged without feeling it, when it runs into unlawful vices, but yet does not awake so as again to run in with repentance. But it desires to awake, that it may again get drunk; because, although the mind is asleep over good works, it is yet awake to the concerns of this world, and voluntarily wishes to be drunk. So it happens that the mind sleeps over what it ought to be awake to, and is awake to what it ought to sleep over. Of the sleep of the mind was written before in the same book of Solomon; it was written, that it was as if the steersman slept in the middle of the sea, and lost the helm. The man is most like that steersman who takes no care of himself amidst the temptations of this world and the waves of vices. He does as the steersman who loses the helm, who relinquishes the care and zeal wherewith he ought to steer the soul and the body. He is very like the steersman who loses his helm on the sea, who relinquishes his provident sagacity among the troubles of this world. But if the steersman keeps his helm, he will come safely to land, sometimes, however, against wind and waves, sometimes with both. So does the mind, when it vigilantly steers the soul: some vices it passes over, some it sees beforehand, and passes round; that is, so that it laboriously repairs the sins it has done, and those it has not done providently avoids, as the steersman does: some of the waves he passes by with the ship, some it passes over. Concerning which is again spoken in the books of Solomon which we call the Song of Songs, about the stoutest champions of the lofty regions; it is said: "Let each of you have his sword by his thigh, because of nocturnal alarms." A man has his sword by his thigh, when he subdues his unlawful lusts with the words of holy doctrine. The night signifies the dark blindness of our frailty. Since no one can see by night how near any danger is to him, it is necessary for him to have his sword by his hip. So holy men must always stand ready for the fight with the cunning foe, fearing invisible dangers. Therefore it is again said in the book of Solomon which we call the Song of Songs; it is said: "Thy nose resembles the tower on Lebanon." That is, that we often smell with our noses what we are unable to see with our eyes. With the nose we distinguish and recognise good and bad odours. What is signified by the nose but the forethought and sagacity of good men? What signifies the high tower on Lebanon but the lofty forethought and the sagacity of good men? They must perceive temptations and attacks before they come, so that they may be able to stand the more firmly when they come. Since every army has the less strength when it comes, if its coming be known beforehand; because it sees those ready whom it thought to find unprepared. It would have made it easier for it, if it had previously expected them to be rather ready than unprepared, and then to have found them ready. Those, on the other hand, who meditate sinning beforehand, and deliberate about it, before they carry it out, are to be admonished to understand with provident sagacity that they will excite a severer judgment on themselves by deliberating on the evil here before they do it, and they will be struck by so much the severer sentence of the judgment the more firmly they are bound with the chains of evil deliberation. They would be much the sooner washed clean of their sins with repentance, if they sinned more from impulse and want of thought. But the oftener they deliberate about it, the later they will be so ; because, unless the mind had previously altogether despised the eternal retribution, it would not have designed committing such a sin. So great a difference there is between the meditated sin, which is designed long, and that which is suddenly perpetrated ; so that he who designs the sin, both sins, and also sometimes afterwards falls into despair. Therefore the Lord did not blame the two sins equally. This he showed, when he said through the prophet Jeremiah : " Beware of inflaming my anger with your designs, so that ye may not be able to quench it afterwards." He spoke again angrily on the same subject through the same prophet, saying : " I will punish you according to your designs." The Lord does not punish equally the designed sin and that which is suddenly perpetrated, because the designed sin is unlike all other sins. But that which is suddenly perpetrated sometimes arises from heedlessness, sometimes from weakness of mind or body. While that which is long designed always arises from evil thoughts. Therefore it was very rightly said through the Psalmist in the praise of the blessed man, in the first Psalm ; it is said that he did not sit in the pestilential chair. This was said because it is very usual for judges and men of rank to sit in chairs. He therefore sits in the chair of pestilence who deliberately does evil. And he also sits in the pestilential chair who can sagaciously distinguish good and evil, and yet prefers to do evil. He sits, as it were, in the chair of the perverse assembly, who exalts himself with the pride of such unrighteousness that he perpetrates every evil designedly. Because, as much as he who sits in the chair is higher in rank than those who stand round, so much is the sin which has been meditated long before, and then perpetrated, above that which has been suddenly thought of, and then perpetrated. Therefore, those who design for a long time are to be admonished to understand how much punishment they shall have more than the others, because now they will not be the companions of sinners, but their leaders.

LVII. That those who repeatedly commit little sins are to be admonished in one way ; in another way those who abstain from little sins, and yet sometimes fall into grievous ones.

In one way are to be admonished those who repeatedly sin, and yet on a small scale ; in another those who guard against the lesser sins, and yet sometimes fall into great sins. They are to be warned, when they sin often, although on a small scale, to think more of the number than the greatness of the sins they commit ; and if they scorn to dread their little sins when they see them, let them at least dread them when they count them. Very minute are the drops of the thin rain, but yet they make a very great flood and strong stream when they are collected together, because there are very many of them. By very small degrees and very imperceptibly penetrates the water into the leaky ship, and yet it strives to effect the same as the roaring wave does in the rough sea, unless it is previously baled out. Very small are the wounds on the scabby body, and yet, if the scab overspreads it entirely, the effect is the same as that of the great wound in the breast. Therefore it is written in the books of Solomon, that he who will not shun his little sins will glide into greater. And if he neglects to repent of the little sins, and sometimes avoid them, he will sooner or later fall into greater ones. They who often sin on a small scale are to be admonished to understand accurately that we often sin worse in little than in great sins, because the sooner we perceive them the sooner we begin to amend them ; while we do not believe that the small ones are sins at all, but get used to them, and amend them with so much the greater difficulty. Whence it often happens that the mind begins by not fearing the little sins, and ends with not fearing the great ones. And it gets used to sins until it attains to a certain supremacy in sinning ; and then, the more confidently it accustomed itself formerly to little sins, and the less it feared them, the less it shuns the great sins. Those, again, are to be admonished who abstain from small sins, and yet sometimes plunge into great ones, to accurately understand themselves, since their mind is very often elated, because they have so cautiously abstained from small sins. It is necessary for them not to commit more grievous sins because of their confidence, that is, that through their elation they are not to fall into the pit of pride, lest they be swallowed up in the vortex of their elation. For often, when they outwardly subdue the little sins, they are internally puffed up with vainglory. And when the mind is internally subdued by pride, it very soon overflows and runs out, and appears in open evil. Therefore, those who abstain from the little sins, and yet sometimes plunge into the great ones, are to be admonished to avoid falling from the position which they think they occupy externally, lest their elation at their small amount of righteousness prove their road to a great sin according to the judgment and requital of the severe Judge. When they think that they have abstained from little sins by their own strength, they are very rightly forsaken by God, until they fall into greater sins ; that, falling, they may understand that they did not stand of themselves, that the mind which was formerly elated at a small amount of good may be humbled to a great evil. They are to be admonished to understand that they often sin still worse by bewaring of little sins than they do with great ones ; because they simulate innocence by bewaring of the little ones. But they do not exculpate themselves at all when they commit the great and open ones. It is an open evil in the sight of God to commit great sins, but it is the simulation of holiness in the sight of men to forego little and commit great sins. Therefore it was said in the Gospel, to the Pharisees that they blew away the fly and swallowed the camel. As if he openly said : "Ye avoid small evils, and devour the great." That is the same which was again blamed through the mouth of Truth, that is Christ ; he said : "Ye tithe your mint and dill and cummin, and leave untithed what is more precious than your other possessions, and the commandments which are still greater in the law ye do not observe : that is, justice and mercy and faith." We must not hear without attention how he mentioned the least valuable plants that grow in gardens, and yet very fragrant. By the fragrance are signified hypocrites, who aspire to the reputation of sanctity, and yet do little good ; and although they do not do too much good, they desire great reputation, and to be praised far and wide.

LVIII. That those who do not begin any good are to be admonished in one way; in another those who begin it, and do not accomplish it well.

In one way are to be admonished those who do not begin any good; in another those who begin it, and do not accomplish it. Those who do not begin any good are not to be taught what they are to do, before they are blamed for what they do; because they will not undertake the unknown that they hear, without hearing previously how mischievous that is which they know; because no man asks another to lift him, if he himself knows not that he has fallen; nor also does he who feels not the pain of his wound desire any physician. Therefore they are first to be told how vain and useless the objects of their affections are, and then they are to be told how useful that is that they have relinquished. First they must understand that they are to avoid what they love. Then they will afterwards be able to perceive that they are to love what they formerly avoided. They will undertake the unknown much better, if they perceive with certainty what there is in the known worthy of blame. They learn to seek the true good with full affection, when they perceive with full understanding that that was falsehood and vanity which they formerly held fast. Let them hear that this present good will soon be separated from all pleasure, and yet the sin which they perpetrate through the pleasure will permanently remain with punishment; and that they must now relinquish compulsorily that which they desire, and yet that which they now compulsorily relinquish will be reserved for their future punishment. Often, however, men are very salutarily terrified with those same objects which they formerly unprofitably loved; when the afflicted mind sees the deep perdition of its own fall, and he sees himself led astray into such danger and destruction, he steps back, and retires, and dreads what he formerly loved. He then learns to love what he formerly despised. Therefore it was said to Jeremiah the prophet, when sent to teach: "I have set thee to-day over kingdoms and nations, to pluck out, and destroy, and dissipate, and scatter, and build, and plant them." Because, unless he had previously destroyed the wrong, he could not have profitably constructed the right; because, unless he had previously plucked out of the minds of his subjects the thorns of vain affection, he would have unprofitably planted in them the words of holy instruction. Therefore also St. Peter pulled down what he reconstructed. That was when he would not teach the Jews anything about what they ought to do, but rebuked them for their former doings, speaking thus : "The Saviour of Nazareth, a man approved among you by virtues, and miracles, and prognostications, which God wrought through him among you, ye betrayed by the hands of unrighteous men, and deliberately slew and hung, as God knew in the beginning, and yet suffered it; the same God aroused him afterwards to release the captives in hell." Peter reproached them with the deed, because he wished them, after perceiving their cruelty, to become contrite and humble, that they might hear the holy doctrine with more advantage, after previously desiring to hear it. Then the Jews answered him, saying : "What can we do in the matter now, brother Peter?" Peter answered, saying : "First repent, and then be baptized." They would soon have despised the renovation and doctrine, had they not previously perceived the fall and destruction of their cruelty through his reproaches. Very similar was the case of St. Paul, when the light came to him from heaven and terrified him : he was not yet told what was right for him to do in future, but he was told of the wrong he had formerly done. When he was terrified, and fell on the ground, and asked, saying : "What art thou, Lord?" he was very soon answered with : "I am the Saviour of Nazareth, whom thou persecutest." And then said he : "Lord, what dost thou bid me do?" Then the Lord answered him : "Arise, and go to yonder city ; they will tell thee there what to do." Behold now, how the Lord spoke from heaven to his persecutor, and rebuked him for the works he had formerly done. Before he told him how he was to conduct himself in future, the pride of Paul had fallen, and all the works it made him perform. And soon after the fall of his pride, he began to construct humility. When he desired instruction from God, the terrible persecutor fell, that the more heavily he fell the more strongly he might rise. So those who have done no good are first to be cast down by reproof from the hardness of their wickedness, that they may after a time be raised, and stand firm with righteous works ; for we cut down tall trees in the wood to erect them afterwards in the building, where we intend to build, although we cannot use them for the work too soon, because of their greenness before they are dry. But the drier they are while on the ground, the more confidently we can erect them. Those, on the other hand, who will never accomplish the good that they begin, are to be admonished to understand with careful consideration that when they relinquish of their own will and accord the good they had determined to do, they thereby cancel that which they formerly began; because, if that waxes not which they determine to do, that wanes which they formerly did. Every man's mind in this world has the nature of a ship. The ship sometimes tries to ascend against the current, but it cannot, unless impelled by the rowers, but must float with the current; it cannot remain still, unless held by an anchor or impelled forward by oars; otherwise it goes with the current. So does the relinquishing of good works. It opposes the good that we formerly did, unless we continue to toil and do good works up to the end. Therefore it was said through the wise Solomon; he said: "He who voluntarily from sloth relinquishes his good works, is most like him who destroys them." Therefore also it was said through John the evangelist to the bishop of the church called Sardis; he said: "Be watchful, and amend the works in thee which are mortal: I have not found thy works perfect in the sight of my God." He said that he had not found his works, that he had formerly done, perfect in the sight of God, because he had not done those which he should have done. So also, if we do not repair that which is mortal in us through sins, that dies which formerly lived in us through good works. They are also to be admonished to consider carefully that it is worse than ever to begin to travel on the road of truth, if one intends afterwards to turn back and traverse the same ground. Because, if we do not desire the former evils we did, nothing hinders us from accomplishing the good works which we now do. They should hear the sentence which is written in the epistle of St. Peter; it is written that it were better for them not to have known the road of truth, than to have turned back after knowing it. They should also hear the sentence written about them in the books called the Apocalypse; it is written that the angel said of the bishop to St. John: "Oh, would that he were either hot or cold. But since he is neither hot nor cold, but lukewarm, although I swallow him, I shall vomit him out of my mouth." He is warm, and not lukewarm, who zealously begins good, and also completes it. But he is cold who does not begin any good. And as that which is cold begins to be lukewarm before it becomes quite warm, so also that which is warm becomes lukewarm before it is altogether cold. So also he who relinquishes the coldness of unbelief, and becomes of lukewarm faith, and will not overcome his lukewarmness, and get warm till he boils. Without doubt, he who continues too long and fixedly in lukewarm faith; despairs of ever being able to boil, until he becomes completely cold; and although he believes when he is cold that he can be warm, he despairs when he is lukewarm, if he remains too long in that condition. So also he who still remains in sin has not relinquished the faith and hope of his conversion; but he who, after his conversion, remains too long lukewarm, has his hope diminished which he entertained when he was sinful. Therefore God requires every man to be either hot or cold, lest he be vomited up because of his lukewarmness. He who is cold thinks to become warm, and he who is warm boils with virtues, lest he be tepid from lukewarmness, and therefore be vomited up. Because all water is less sweet to drink after being warm, if it cools again, than it was before it ever began to be made lukewarm.

LIX. That in one way are to be admonished those who do evil secretly, and good openly; in another those who try to hide the good they do, and to a certain extent openly show that they wish men to think they are bad.

In one way are to be admonished those who do evil secretly, and good openly; in another those who hide the good they do, and do not care what men think of them. Those are to be admonished who do evil secretly, and good openly, to consider how quickly earthly fame passes away, and how firmly divine fame lasts. They are to be admonished to fix the eyes of their mind on the end of things, and see how human glory departs very quickly, and how the sublime and eternal Judge knows all secret sins, and is always ready to requite them.

Secret evils have an eternal witness in the divine Judge. But the good they do publicly before men is almost, as it were, without testimony, because they have not eternal testimony. But they have eternal testimony of the evil they do secretly, when they withhold from men what they ought to say, and say what they ought to withhold. Of such men the Lord said, that they most resembled the sepulchres of dead men, which are often made very beautiful outside, and inside are very foully filled. So are they who show their goodness before men, and hide their badness inside themselves: they are hypocrites, and would like to please before the eyes of men externally without good works internally. They are to be warned not to despise the good deeds they do, but expect a greater reward for themselves than they expect. They despise them too much, if they do not expect for them a greater reward than earthly praise, and are content therewith. They sell for too small a price that with which they could buy the kingdom of heaven: they sell it for the praise of men. Of which the Lord said in his Gospel, that that was their reward. By doing good publicly, and evil secretly, they signify that men are to shun that which they do secretly, and love that which they do publicly: by their example they live for others, and die themselves. Those, on the other hand, who do good secretly, and yet in some actions pretend to do evil publicly, and do not care what men say of them, are to be admonished not to set a bad example to others with their dissimulation, although they themselves endeavoured not to lead others astray or injure them with their dissimulation, lest it be seen that they love themselves more than their neighbours, as if they themselves drank wine, and gave the others poison. When they set a bad example publicly, and do good secretly, they do not help their neighbours at all with the latter proceeding, and injure them with the former. Because, whoever hides his good works from the desire of avoiding vain ostentation, does not lead any after him to good works, when he will not set the example to others that he properly ought to set. He plants, as it were, trees, and cuts off the roots. Therefore Christ said in his Gospel: "Do your good works before men, that they may honour your Father who is in heaven." But yet a different sentence from this one is written in the same books ; he said : " Beware of doing your righteousness before men, lest they praise you." But what kind of works can they be, which in one place we are forbidden to do before men, while in another we are taught to conceal them that we may not be praised, and display them that God may be praised, and others may take the same example ? When God forbade us to perform our righteousness before men, he showed us why he forbade it, when he said, " lest they praise you." And again, when he bade us do it before men, he said immediately afterwards, " that they may honour your Father who is in heaven." With these two sentences he showed us why we are to hide our good works, and why we are to proclaim them ; that every man, whatever good he wishes to do, may not do it merely to be praised, but rather for the sake of God. Therefore every good work is good, whether it be open or concealed. When a man does not seek his own glory thereby, but that of the lofty Father, although he does it openly, he conceals it by having the testimony of him whom he thinks to please that he did it for the sake of God, not for glory. But if it is done secretly, and he yet desires to be blamed, and afterwards praised on that account, though no man knows it, yet it is done before men, just as if it had been done with the cognizance of all those whose praise he desired in his mind. Therefore it is better, as we have said above, for every man to wipe away from the minds of others the unfavourable opinion of himself, as far as he can without sin, because, if he does not do so, by his example he makes all imbibe the sin who attribute to him any evil. Therefore it often happens that, when a man does not care how much evil is attributed to him, although he does not do any himself, he sins through those who follow his example. Therefore St. Paul said to his disciples, when he allowed some of them to partake of what he did not wish them all to partake of, lest the weak should imitate their example, and through that be disturbed by some temptation, which they would not afterwards be able to withstand ; therefore he said : " See now that this your privilege be not a temptation to others." And again he said on the same subject : " Then will thy brother perish on thine account, for whom Christ formerly suffered. So when ye sin against your brothers, and slay their weak intellects, ye sin against God." Of the same Moses spoke, saying : "Speak not evil to the deaf man." And again, he said : "Trip not up the blind man." He speaks evil to the deaf man, who accuses him who is absent, knowing him to be innocent. And he trips up the blind man, who injures the simple man by doing good secretly, and pretending to do evil.

LX. How many a one is to be exhorted that his good deeds may not become evil deeds.

These then are the modes in which the shepherds of the mind and soul are to teach all men, that they may always have the salve ready which belongs to the wound that they perceive. For while it is very laborious to have to teach each one separately, it is still more difficult to teach them all together, for he must regulate the voice of instruction with such art, that he may find the remedy that belongs to each man, because the diseases of all men are not alike. And he must conform his conduct to his instruction, that he may himself pass safely through the vices of others, as a sharp sword divides the wound in two, and emerges with unturned edge. He must overawe the proud, without thereby frightening too much the humble ; and teach the former humility, without increasing too much the fear of the latter ; cheer the humble, without omitting to coerce the proud ; teach the slow the zeal of good works, without urging on overmuch the zealous ; and strive to moderate the exertions of the latter, without making the idle confident, lest they become torpid ; restrain the anger of the impatient, without making the soft assentator careless ; and yet strive to infuse warmth into him, without inflaming the angry ; teach the niggardly liberality, without making the liberal wasteful ; and again, teach the generous economy, without teaching the niggardly base avarice ; and teach the licentious marriage, without making the continent licentious ; and teach the continent continence, without teaching them to despise marriage ; and try to soothe and praise the good, without soothing the bad ; and praise the greatest good, without despising the least good ; and again, praise those who do a little good, without letting them think they do enough.

LXI. How a man is to be exhorted when suffering under many evil temptations.

It is also a very severe labour for the teacher to have to find in general instruction, when he teaches all the people together, the instruction which they all require ; because their vices are very different. And yet it is still more difficult to instruct singly, because many of them have all the vices from which all men are to be interdicted. Often also it happens that some are too immoderately glad because of some good fortune or agitation of the blood, and very soon afterwards, because of some misfortune, too immoderately sad. Therefore the teacher must be careful to restrain the sadness as far as he can, without increasing the immoderate joy ; and again, bridle the joy which arises from prosperity, without allowing the sadness which arises from sudden dejection or flow of bad blood to increase too much. For often the sanguine are dispirited because of their immoderate precipitation, when anything they design opposes them, which they cannot so quickly accomplish as they would like. So also, the very sad are often dispirited with immoderate fear, and yet sometimes are impelled by rashness to attempt what they desire. Therefore the teacher must moderate the sudden fear, without allowing too immoderate boldness to grow, and yet repress the boldness of the sanguine, without allowing to grow in them the repression of fear, which arises from the flow of bad blood. What wonder is it if the physicians of the mind keep to this method of instruction, when the physicians of the body have such sagacity in their art ? Sometimes excessive disease oppresses the body. Against such a disease a potent remedy would be required, if the sick body could endure it. Therefore the physician must be very careful to administer to the patient a remedy so strong as to expel the disease, and yet so mild that the weak frame may endure it, lest he expel from the body both the disease and life. But he assists the patient very wisely, when he simultaneously expels the disease without injuring the body. Why cannot then much more the physician of the mind heal the diseases of the vices of many men with the same instruction, when the remedies of the mind are so much more various than those of the body? And yet the physicians of the body often simultaneously save the body and expel the disease.

LXII. That sometimes it is better to leave the light sins alone, lest the graver ones be perpetrated.

Often also it happens that two vices assail the same man, one less, the other greater. Therefore the physician of the mind must first direct his attention to the one which he thinks likely to be the first to bring the man to perdition. Sometimes, however, when the attention is concentrated on the one, the other increases. Therefore the wise physician must first let the lesser one increase, and direct his attention to the greater; until the time comes when he can see to the other, unless he can attend to them both together. He does not accumulate vices thereby, but tends the wounded man whom he has to watch over, till he can completely cure him. Those who cannot relinquish gluttony are often overcome by fornication. Often also it happens, that he who dreads and abstains from both of them, falls into vain-glory, because no one can relinquish either of those without the other increasing. Which, then, of the evils ought rather to be attended to, if not the most dangerous? Therefore it is better to let the vain-glory increase for a time, until full attention can be given to the fornication. Therefore St. Paul said to his servant, when he saw that he would either continue to do evil, or desire praise for his goodness; he said: "If thou desirest not to have cause to fear thy Lord, do good: then he will praise thee." Yet no man must do the good he does, merely that he may not have cause to fear his Lord; or, again, for the desire of earthly praise. Therefore the noble teacher St. Paul, when he saw that he could not teach his servant both to relinquish evil and not to desire any praise therefor, allowed him the vainglory for a time, and forbade the evil. When he allowed the vainglory, he forbade him the evil, that he might more easily relinquish the one by having in the other what he desired.

LXIII. That weak minds are not to be taught too loftily.

The teacher is to know that he is by no means to impose on any man more than he can bear, lest the rope of his mind be overstretched till it breaks asunder. Therefore lofty doctrine is better concealed from many men, and preached to few. Therefore Truth, that is Christ, spoke of itself, saying: "Who, thinkest thou, is so faithful and prudent a steward, that God will set him over his household, that he may equitably apportion to them the wheat at the due time?" By the measuring of the wheat is signified measured words, lest more of them are poured into the shallow mind than it can hold, so that it overflows. Therefore St. Paul said: "I cannot speak to you as to spiritual, but as to carnal men; since in your faith ye are still children, I must still give you milk to drink, not meat to eat." Therefore Moses hid the excessive brightness of his countenance before the people, when he came from his secret conversation with the Lord, because he did not yet wish to teach them the secrets of the holy law, nor could they yet understand them. Therefore it was also commanded, through Moses, that if any one dug a pit, and neglected to enclose it, and an ox or an ass fell into it, he was to pay for it. So also, if any one comes to the highest wisdom, and then does not conceal the secrets of divine wisdom from the foolish, he is accounted sinful, if he reduces either a pure or an impure man to despair. Therefore the Lord said to the blessed Job: "Who gave the cock wisdom?" That means that all holy teachers, who now teach in the darkness of this world, bear a resemblance to cocks, who crow in dark nights. The teacher cries like a cock at night, when he says: "Now it is time for us to awake from sleep." And again, when he says : "Awake, ye righteous, and sin no more." The habit of the cock is, that he sings much louder before than after dawn. But when day approaches, he sings more finely and delicately. So every wise teacher must preach open and clear doctrine to the dark minds, and not yet proclaim any secret and deep doctrine. But when he sees the dark minds of foolish men approaching somewhat to the light of truth, he must display to them more secret and deeper doctrine out of the holy books.

LXIV. Of the teacher's works and words.

It is now necessary that among other remarks we revert, out of love, to what we spoke of above. That is, that every teacher is to teach more with his works than his words. Why, the cock, whom we spoke of above, before he begins to crow, lifts his wings and arouses himself, that he may be wide awake with the zeal of good works, lest he arouse others with his words, and himself be remiss in good works. Let him shake himself till he is awake, and then stir up others to the zeal of good works ; let him flap himself with the wings of his thoughts. That is, he is first to investigate with the vigilance of his contemplation, what there is unprofitable in himself, and rebuke himself severely in his thoughts, and then with his instruction regenerate the life of others. First he must punish in himself his own evils, and repent of them, and then point out and punish those of others. First they must display in their own works all that they intend afterwards to teach with their words, so that the works may call before the words.

LXV. When any one has fulfilled all this, how he must bethink himself, and understand himself, lest either his life or his teaching elate him too much.

Often also the teachers are excited by secret joy, when they see that they teach fitly and properly. But it is then very necessary for him quickly to wound himself with the fear of becoming elated at his eloquence ; lest, while he cures the wounds of others, he himself be elated with pride through neglect of his salvation ; lest he forsake himself while he attends to his friends, and himself fall, while he strives to raise others. Because often virtue and excellence prove the destruction of their possessor, when from recklessness he presumes too much on the virtues he has, and does not care to increase them ; then they prove his destruction, because virtues always contend against vices. But the mind often flatters itself, and with the flattery relinquishes the fear of its own reflections. Then the mind rests confidently in presumption. Then the cunning waylayer comes to the torpid mind, and recounts to it all its former good deeds, and makes him believe that he flourishes in virtues beyond all other men, until he becomes puffed up and elated in his mind. And then, in the eyes of the righteous Judge, the recollection of his virtues and excellence becomes a very deep pit, into which he falls very heavily, because he falls before the God who is the teacher of humility, when he exalts himself in his own eyes because of his virtues. Therefore it was said through the prophet Ezekiel ; he said : "Descend from where thou thinkest thou art most beautiful." As if he had openly said : "Because of the beauty of thy virtues thou wert elated, and thence thou shalt be degraded." Again, the same prophet spoke a parable about Jerusalem, and blamed the mind which was proud of its virtues, saying : "The Lord saith to this city : Thou wert perfect in my beauty, and wert proud thereof, and committed fornication of thine own accord." The mind is elated through presuming on its virtues, when it boasts of its merits, and rejoices confidently in itself. But through presumption it is led on with pride to committing fornication. First, the accursed spirit teaches it vainglory externally, until it penetrates by pride, and then seduces it with many vices. We must consider the words he spoke to the citizens : "Ye committed fornication of your own accord." That is, as soon as the mind despises God, it seeks its own vainglory, and collects for its own praise all the good that was granted it for God's praise ; it desires thereby to extend its own praise, and strives to appear to all men as distinguished and wonderful as possible. He commits fornication of his own will, who binds himself to the devil, and forsakes the Lord from the desire of human praise. Therefore David said in the seventy-seventh Psalm : "The Lord suffered their virtue and excellence to be made captive, and their beauty to be in the hands of their enemies." Their virtue is made captive, and their beauty is led into the hands of their enemies, when the old enemy has power over the deceived mind because of its pride, when it exalts itself on the strength of good works. The cunning enemy tempts every man with the pride of good works, and even tempts the minds of the elect, although he cannot fully deceive them. For when any mind is elated, it is forsaken by God ; and as soon as it is forsaken by God, it is afflicted by the fear of the devil. Therefore David said again in the twenty-ninth Psalm : "I thought in my pride and abundance, when I was full both of wealth and good works, that there would be no end of it." But when he saw he was inflated with the pride of his good works, he proclaimed very soon after what he afterwards suffered, saying : "Lord, thou turnedst thy countenance from me, and I was afflicted." As if he had openly said : "I thought I was strong in many virtues, but I very soon saw, after thou hadst forsaken me, how weak I was." And again, he said in the hundred and eighteenth Psalm : "I swore, as I had determined, to hold thy judgments and righteousness, Lord ; revive me according to thy words, Lord." But he very quickly perceived, when he experienced affliction, that it was not in his own power to hold what he had promised and sworn. And then he soon had recourse to prayer, and sought help therein, saying : "I am humiliated on all sides and in everything, Lord." So the divine dispensation, before bestowing on a man virtue and excellence, often shows him his infirmity, and reminds him of his want of power, lest he be elated because of his virtues. Therefore also it was said to the prophet Ezekiel that he was the son of man, before the heavenly things were shown to him. As if God had openly admonished him, and said to him : "Be not too elated in thy mind because of the things thou seest, but consider cautiously what thou art ; and though thou traverse the highest, do not forget that thou art man, but consider very carefully in thyself the bridle of thine infirmity, although thou art raised above thy condition. Therefore it is very necessary for us to direct the eye of our mind to the contemplation of our infirmity. When virtues and excellence most fully flatter us, it is very necessary for us to bow down humbly with our mind, and salutarily reflect on the good we have neglected, not on that which we have done ; that our mind may be so much the firmer and stronger in virtues in the sight of God, from the humility wherewith we wound it, when we remember our heedlessness. Therefore Almighty God often lets the minds of his elect sin in some small things, although they are perfect in many, that they may fear, and be dispirited because of their imperfection, although they shine brightly in some admirable virtues ; that they may not exalt themselves too much on the strength of the great things, while they cannot amend the little ; lest they presume to be proud of the noblest works, whilst they cannot subdue the most insignificant evils.

See now, thou good man John, how fair and beautiful a character I have depicted, ugly painter as I am. In it I have shown what a pastor ought to be. I was compelled by thy blame to lead many men to the shore of perfection in the ship of my mind, while I myself am still tossed by the waves of my sins. But I pray thee to reach me a plank of thy prayers in the shipwreck of this present life, that I may sit on it till I come to land ; and raise me with the hand of thy merits, for the burden of my own sins has oppressed me.

These are now the waters, which the God of Hosts promised as a solace to us earthdwellers. He said that he wished in the world ever-living waters to flow from the hearts of those who believed in him well under the sky. There is little doubt that the source of the waters is in the kingdom of heaven ; that is, the Holy Ghost. Whence saints and the elect drew it, after those who obeyed God had directed it through holy books on this earth through the minds of men variously. Some dam it in within their minds, the stream of wisdom, hold it with their lips, so that it flows not out to no purpose. But the well remains in the man's breast, by the grace of the Lord, deep and still. Some let it flow away over the tract of land in rills. That is not a wise thing, if so pure water is dispersed in murmuring, shallow streams over the fields, till it becomes a marsh. But draw water now to drink, since the Lord has granted that Gregory should direct to your doors the Lord's stream. Let him now fill his vessel, who has brought hither a watertight pitcher. Let him come back soon. If any man here has brought to this spring a leaky pitcher, let him repair it carefully, lest he spill the clearest of waters, or lose the drink of life.

2. (heading). nemnað, MS.

3. The Hatton text of Alfred's preface is full of erasures, alterations and interpolations. I have in all cases, where possible, restored the original reading. Wherever Ʒette occurs, the te has been erased, portions of the erased letters being in some cases still visible: I have, therefore, in all cases where Ʒæt is followed by a distinct erasure, added the te in brackets. In like manner the e of swæ has been erased, though in some cases still partially visible; I have therefore restored the erased letter. In several words, hyrsumedon (3.6), hy nu (3.12), hy næron (5.12), yldran (5.14), hy hit (5.24), an eleventh century y—easily recognizable by its uprightness and the point above it—has been written over an erasure. I have not hesitated to remove these y's, which are quite incompatible with the archaic character of Alfred's preface, although my emendations are not absolutely certain, as the original letters are not visible. The adjective termination æ has also been tampered with in several cases by erasing one of the letters, gefyldaæ, (5.10), oðræ cristnæ (7.5), sumæ (7.6) being made into gefylda, &c. There are besides a variety of interpolations, some apparently quite modern, which are not worth noticing. It will in future be understood that all alterations, additions, &c. that I notice are contemporary with the MS. itself, unless the contrary is stated, or doubt expressed. It is, of course, impossible to fix the date of simple erasures.

3.2. This change of person from the dignified hateð to the more familiar hate seems to have been frequent in prefaces and dedications. Compare Ælfric's preface to his translation of the Heptateuch: Ælfric munuc gret Æðelwærd ealdormann eadmodlice. Ðu bæde me leof ƿæt ic sceolde ƿe awendan of Ledene on Englisc ƿa boc Genesis.

3.4. Observe 'Angel-cynn,' not 'Eng-lond,' the idea of the race predominating over that of the land which they only partially possessed.

3.5. on ƿam dagum. The genuineness of this addition is a little doubtful: the handwriting looks old, but is different from that of the rest of the MS. I have thought it safest to retain it.

3.6. ærendwrecum. A curious modification of the normal ærendracum (39.3). The w is paralleled by that of the Middle E. whole, whore for hole, hore, still preserved orthographically. In wreccan (awaken) for weccan (193.21) a similar abnormal w arises from the addition of r to an original w. The vowel change seems to point to some confusion with the word wrecca (exile).

3.8. gerymdon. The ge is written small and crowded.

5.7. feawe. The second e erased, and an a written over.

5.13. cwæden. The e made into an o; seemingly a later change.

5.20. eallaæ. The æ over erasure; the original form was probably ealla, as in C.

6.21. Asserie, MS. v. l.

7.1. Creacas. The first c and first a erased, and g and c written over, making the word Greccas. It need hardly be remarked that Creacas is the genuine old form, modified by the lautverschiebung; compare the forms creacum in the Traveller's Song, crecas, crecise in Alfred's translation of the Metres of Boethius.

7.4. ealla. In the MS. eall, ending with an erasure: I have supplied the erased letter.

7.8. ge don. The change from we to ge and back again, harsh as it may seem, is preferable to the plausible reading gedon, in one word. Don seems to take the prefix ge only in the participial preterite and in certain cases where causation or result is expressed, as in gedeð ðæt he bēð—(93.2).

9.1. æstel. The word only occurs here and in Elfric's glossary, where it translates stylus. It is no doubt a derivative of a substantive æst (German ast), which does not, however, appear anywhere in the documents that have been preserved. My translation is purely conjectural. The following account of the word given in Lye's dictionary is probably, like the rest of his information, taken without acknowledgment from Junius's MS. dictionary, although it cannot be proved in this case, as the earlier sheets of Junius's MS. are wanting. It gives a satisfactory explanation, but I do not know what authority there is for it. 'Æstel. Indicatorum, index, quemadmodum in privatæ aliqujus bibliothecæ libris lacera olim chartula vel tenui festuca locum intermissæ lectionis designabunt, ita grandioribus ac publico destinatis voluminibus magnificentiæ ergo affigebant indiculum summa sui parte auro purpuraque contextum ac deinceps diremptum in complures bysseas tæniâs quibus initia resumendæ lectionis aptissime denotabantur. Insignia sunt Ælfredi regis verba in præmio præmisso magni Gregorii Pastoralibus a se translatis,' &c.

9.8. This curious doggrel is, as well as the similar piece at the end, probably Alfred's own composition. It is only distinguished from prose by its regular alliteration and use of poetic words and phrases, such as 'iegbuend,' 'Dryhtnes cempa,' 'rodra weard,' &c. Metrically it is little more than dislocated prose, although some lines are worse than others. The freedom and looseness of all O. E. versification makes it peculiarly liable to degenerate into mere prose, which is also the case with much of our modern blank verse. I have in the text printed the piece as prose. A high authority in all metrical matters, Mr. Skeat, has kindly taken it in hand, and split it up into regular lines. This is his scheme :

Dis ærendgewrit Agustinus ofer sealtne sæ suðan brohte iegbuendum, swa hit ær fore adihtode Dryhtnes cempa
5 Rome papa. Ryhtspell monig Gregorius gleawmod gindwod ðurh sefan snyttro searoðonca hord.

Forðæm he monncynnes mæst gestriende rodra Wearde, Romwara betest,

- 10 monna modwelegost mærdum gefrægost.
Siððan min on Englisc Ælfred cyning awende worda gehwelc, & me his writurum sende suð & norð; heht him swelcra ma brengan bi ðære bisene ðæt he his biscepum 15 sendan meahte, forðæm hi his sume ðorfton ða ðe Lædenspræce læste cuðon.

Observe the rhymes in l. 6 and the double alliteration in 9, both probably intentional.

9.19. Two letters erased after hie. The original reading must have been the same as that of C. It seems that the headings of the separate chapters were copied direct from the table of contents, for the heading of Chapter II. has also the altered reading scoldon ne. Compare also the heading of Chapter VIII.

10.17. se to, MS., but the heading of the chapter, p. 60, has þe.

11.11. wilnað, MS., so also in heading of chapter, p. 53.

11.13. Chapter IX. This passage is obscurely and clumsily translated; the Latin has 'quod mens præesse volentium plerumque sibi ficta bonorum operum promissione blanditur.'

13.6. ðær for ðære. Compare ðær[e] (421.8) and dryhten ur in the Vespasian Psalms.

13.11. geornlice. The eor over erasure.

13.17. ymb ða over erasure.

19.18. somrædenne. The om over erasure; the tail of a y is still visible.

20.22. embe. This e for y occurs sporadically in many of the older MSS. It seems to be most frequent in the Glosses to Solomon's Proverbs (Cott. Vesp. D. xvi.): gelden (aureus), wertum (olera), letig (callidus), &c. Compare unnetlices, 77.12.

21.10. lasð. This word must not be confounded with the superlative of læt, which is latost; it is a substantive (Gothic laists, O. H. G. leist), which in O. E. only appears in the sense of 'track,' 'footstep.' It must however have had other meanings: the Modern E. 'last' (German leisten) = the mould of the foot, points to one. It is, I believe, generally taken for granted that in our modern phrase 'at last,' the 'last' is the superlative of 'late'; it seems however more probable that it is derived from this O. E. on last, and consequently that the 'last' has nothing to do with 'late.'

23.3. untruṁan. The an over erasure; there seem also to be some traces of erasure after the preceding ða.

23.15. underfenge. The present underfonge would make better sense: a man can hardly be said to fear doing what he has already done. The tense was probably suggested by the Latin 'adeptum se esse pertimescat.'

23.21. feorða. The neuter, corresponding with 'on feower' above, seems more idiomatic than the feorða (dæl understood) of C., although both MSS. agree in ƿridda: C. ii. alone has the neuter in both cases.

23.22. geðæf. My translation of this word is purely conjectural. Is it connected with geðāfian? Mr. Skeat suggests 'be their help': that is, be their amender or corrector. Mr. Lumby compares Boethius 38.2 'Ic eom geþaƿa þ̅ þ̅ is soþ' = 'I am convinced that it is true,' and translates 'be convinced of them.' This is satisfactory, as far as the meaning is concerned, but the form of the word is quite anomalous, unless we assume that the root vowels geðæf, geðafa, &c. are short; otherwise geðāf or geðāfe would be the only possible forms. There can, however, be no doubt as to the genuineness of the word: I find now that Junius cites 'geðæf and eaðhylde' (contentus) from the Reg. Ben.

25.8. ƿeah ƿe hi næfre—næren, wilniað ƿeah—. This omission of the pronoun in subordinate sentences is very common in the Pastoral, especially in explanatory clauses: 'ond nu fundiað swelce wreccan ond teoð to, woldon underfon'—(51.22); compare 'to þam Lucius Bretene kyning sende stafas: bæd þæt he wære Cristen gedon.' (Chronicle, Earle 8.15). There are several examples of the omission in other cases as well; compare 85.14, 111.21, 149.8 (omission of hi), 181.24 (of ge). Some of these examples however are of doubtful authority, as the omission may be only a scribal error; the same remark applies also to those few cases of omission of the pronoun in a principal clause.

25.12. cræft. The text has arcem, which was misread as artem.

25.20. onginnan here has the sense of 'undertake,' and is almost periphrastic. Compare 67.3 'angiennað seegan.' In both passages there is no corresponding word in the Latin.

26.12. hio omitted in MS.

27.3. æwfeſtam. Originally -um; the u made into an a.

27.8. Observe the metaphorical use of eald, (Latin primas cathedras); compare 'ieldesð ofer ða halgan cirican' (115.16), where the original has 'summum.'

27.21. Neither the sense of 'for ðam dome his geðylde' nor the connection with the original 'per iudicium reprobationis' is very clear: my translation is conjectural.

27.22. unde ad se quibusdam et post miracula venientibus dicit (Christus). Alfred has evidently referred the 'wundru' to the 'unlærde' instead of Christ himself.

27.23. cuið is the correct reading: the Latin has 'dicat.'

27.23. hwæt might also be translated 'who,' as Old E. does not seem to observe the modern distinction between what and who very strictly. Compare Beow. 237, 'hwæt sindon ge searohæbbendra?' (who are ye—?).

29.2. The 'sanctus' of H. seems incorrect: the Latin has simply 'Paulo attestante.'

29.8. be ðæm—cweð. There is some difficulty about the exact sense of be in this very frequent collocation, as it generally translates some causative particle such as hinc (as in the present case), inde, unde. In one passage (131.11) be ðæm translates hinc without any cweð, so that the translation 'of which,' which I have generally adopted, is quite impossible. The fact, however, that in another passage (433.8) hinc is translated by 'ymbe ðæt (is gecweden)' seems to justify my rendering.

30.20. The 'sæs grund' of C. ii. approaches nearest to the Latin 'profundum maris.'

33.15. becierde. There is no corresponding word in the Latin. Perhaps 'evaded' would be a better translation: compare 'sume ða yða he becerð mid ðy scipe' (433.7), where the Latin has 'per obliquum findit.'

33.17. Here bet is used in a purely quantitival sense. Compare 'gode hwile þone here gefiende' (Chronicle, 66.8) and 'god dæl þæs folces' (Chronicle, 102.7).

35.9. The 'longe,' omitted by C. i., is required by the Latin 'longi.'

36.5. earda, MS. v.1.

36.17. forlet, MS.

37.7. pleah. This is a hitherto unrecorded strong verb, of which the infinitive occurs p. 229.20, 'nyle his selves plion.' There is no word that exactly corresponds in the Latin, but the context leaves no doubt of the meaning, which is confirmed by the substantives pleoh (393.9) and plihht. This word was overlooked or misunderstood by Junius in the present passage, but the infinitive was given correctly from 229.20. Later dictionary makers have assumed that the verb is weak, and have given it an unverified preterite pleode.

37.9. ðær is used in the sense of if, as in 455.27.

39.3. ærenddracan, MS., quasi 'errand-dragons.'

41.11. mægene. This word has been partly worn away, and inked over by a later hand; the e may therefore be an error.

41.17. forebyrde. No corresponding Latin word. The word does not appear in the dictionaries. Junius has however unforebyrdig = 'impatiens,' from Scint. 11. Perhaps the word ought to be translated 'continence,' after the analogy of the O. H. G. furipurt = 'continentia,' unfuripurtig = infirmus (Graff).

44.7. ryht, MS.

45.17. ðara, MS.

48.11. afeoll, MS. The Latin 'emanavit' points to 'aweoll' as the true reading.

49.14. earfeðlican is the correct reading; the Latin has 'per activam vitam.'

50.15. selfe, MS. v. l.

51.22. fandiað, MS. fundiað is no doubt the correct reading: the Latin has 'anhelat.'

51.24. gestondan seems preferable to the simple standan of C.; the ge has an intensitive force—keep their footing.

52.3. Here also the ge has an intensitive force, and its omission is probably an error, for C. reads gegripað in the table of contents (10.11).

53.14. ge omitted in MS. after sua.

53.18. The corresponding word in the original seems to be 'præerat,' but the connection between the English and Latin is very vague. The reading gehened (= 'humiliated') of C. i. is certainly wrong. If the text is not corrupt, the only way is to consider gehiered as the participle of hēran (to hear) in the sense of 'being estimated,' as in a common Greek and Latin idiom.

55.5. smeaunge, MS., with a written above the second e.

57.9. beom, MS.

57.9. keled, MS. A very curious form, if the ke stands for the prefix ge. The Latin has 'ducitur.' Both MSS. show an abnormal vowel, e for æ.

59.2. getruwað. The Latin has 'etiam peritus se nauta confundit.' Alfred seems to have read 'confidit' for 'confundit.'

59.10. æt, see note on 247.21.

59.20. Fariseos in both MSS., C. ii. also has the same ending, and it occurs again in the same word, 363.6; the genitive plural Phariseo also appears, 361.25. Several examples of the masculine plural nominative and accusative ending os for as, as in Old Saxon, occur also in the Glosses to the Proverbs (magos), and the plural hygewælmōs in Cædmon (l. 980, Grein) has called forth a large amount of critical ingenuity.

61.6. bissecephade, MS. Comp. horssum in the Martyrology fragment.

61.10. licuma for lichoma is a common form in the Pastoral; the loss of the medial h is a familiar phenomenon, and the further change of licoma into licuma seems to be suggested by the verb cuman and the substantive cuma.

61.22. ongiēne. The Latin has poposcerit. The reading of C. seems the most intelligible, if we take the onginnan in the sense of 'undertake,' 'strive for.'

62.9. lifes omitted in C. v. l.

63.1. In urne hwelcne for ure hwelcne the analogy of the hwelcne has changed the genitive plural ure into a possessive agreeing with hwelcne as if it were a substantive; compare ures nanes (211.14) for ure nanes, and urra selfra (220.5) for ure selfra, which occurs two lines below.

65.5. healan. The dictionaries only give the adjective healedē. The nominative is uncertain; the analogy of the O. H. G. hola would make it heale.

65.23. suel, MS.

67.12. fot.a, MS.

68.24. Clause omitted in C. i. v. l.

69.3. drygde, Latin 'atterunter.'

71.6. uta { flitð
slitð }, MSS., Latin 'trahitur.'

71.26. oðerra is required by the Latin 'aliarum.'

73.1. ðæt (mod) is required by the Latin 'animus.'

73.4. All three MSS. agree in reading he for ne; the Latin has 'turpitudinem non exercet.'

73.5. singalam, MS., with u written above the second a.

73.9. asigð, astigð, MSS., Latin 'labitur.'

75.13. ða ðe ðær agyltað. A clear example of the relative use of ðær as in the M. H. G. 'alle die dâ sint,' 'allez daz der lebet.' In Danish der (=Icelandic þar) is used by itself as an indeclinable relative. Other examples in the Pastoral will be found under 117.16, 425.22.

77.12. unnetlices. See note to 20.22.

inne } cundan, MSS., Latin 'interni.'

81.3. se, MS. It is possible that there may have been an occasional phonetic confusion between sio and se, as there certainly was between hie and he (Introd. p. 26); compare sio æsprýng (49. 12).

82.24. ieciinta, MS.

85.2. ymest is probably a contraction of yfemest; compare 135.24, where C. has yfemestum and H. ymestun.

87.4. heo doð. These words have been inked over by a later hand, the letters having been partially rubbed away. The original reading may have been he doo.

87.5. ecean. The original has 'interni,' which seems to have been read as 'eterni.'

87.17. beboden omitted in H.

88.12. læran omitted in C. i.: there is no word to correspond in the Latin.

90.20. ðer, MS. v. l. C. ii. has also ðer.

91.6. hie gereccað ðis andwearde lif fleonde can hardly be called idiomatic English; the Latin has 'fugitiva esse præsentia indicant.'

91.7. godcundde, MS.

91.20. Here we have a clear instance of the use of ðes for se, which is not unfrequent in O. E. The Latin has in this case simply 'tuba.' Compare Finnesburg 7, 'nu scineð ðes mona waðol under wolcnum.' 409. 33, 'ðios sæ,' where the Latin has 'mare' alone, is probably also an example of the idiom, although in this, as in many other cases, the context would allow the translation 'this.'

95.4. æppel is, as Mr. Cockayne observes (Shrine, p. 25), one of those words which change their gender in the plural. The plural æpplas occurs, however, p. 69.1, but in the sense of pupil of the eye. It is possible that the forms may vary with the different senses of the word. It may be remarked that 'reade apla' is an overliteral rendering of 'mala punica,' which means 'pomegranates.'

97.17. ofermeaung. This word only occurs here. Junius in his MS. dictionary defines it thus, 'superabundans discussio et rei alicujus pertractatio plus justo curiosa;' which Lye copies straight off, only interpolating 'vel deliberatio' after 'discussio.'

99.2. æurh seems to be omitted in both MSS. before æa; the original has 'per speculationis altitudinem.'

99.7. æær omitted in H.

99.7. arimde, a mistranslation of the original's 'rimatur.'

99.14. cwæð, cwð, MSS., no corresponding word in Latin.

101.16. heafðum, of a single head; compare Cynewulf's Dream of the Rood, l. 63 (I quote as far as possible from the Ruthwell Cross, which Grein ignores), 'alegdun hiæ hinæ limwœrignæ, gistoddun him æt licæs heafðum' and the similar usage with breost (137.8, 419.29), in one case of a man, in the other of a dog, where Modern E. would require the singular, the idea of duality being only kept up in speaking of the more conspicuous female breast. It is probable that the same process of generalization took place with the word 'head,' which must originally have signified some distinct part of the head, probably one of the temples; the plural (or perhaps originally the dual) would then come to mean the whole head, and when the original partitive sense of the word had been lost sight of, the singular would be used from evident reasons of convenience.

105.5. totodon ut, Latin 'eminet.' This word seems only to occur here. Compare Icelandic tota (beak, finger ends of a glove), and the O.H.G. zota, zata, (Modern G. zotte) and uparzatit, which glosses 'supereminet.' The lines of P. Plowmans Crede, 'his ton toteden out, as he the londe treddede' (l. 425), are exactly parallel.

105.8. æyrstendum over an erased æyrscendum, which is still partially legible. This is a deliberate and very ingenious alteration of the scribe's, who evidently was not acquainted with the Eastern custom of threshing with oxen.

107.11. ryhtwises, MS.; compare 133.15, 65.20.

107.18. I am unable to explain the word Ioþ and its connection with the rest of the text.

109.7. eorðan, the e altered from an original i.

111.12. scu[e]lc, MS.

111.23. forsieh, MS.

113.10. The second æt is added at the end of the line, and may be late.

114.3. tælvierðe, MS. v.l., Latin 'quod adjuvat.'

118.7. eowan, MS. v.l.

119.8. Only one suelcne in C. i.

121.2. speon, MS.

121.15. This hine can hardly be right; are we to read hi ne?

121.16. ryhte, ryht, MSS., Latin 'jure.'

121.17. licet, licette, MSS., the Latin has presents throughout.

123.9. ææm omitted in MS.

123.16. wræde, MS.

125.13. monianne, MS., Latin 'miscenda.'

125.14. gemonunge, MS.

126.14. gehæfð, MS.

127.17. scoldon. This preterite for the present sculon of C., which occurs again, 131.18.19, can hardly be correct; it may originate in some such reading as scolon, which C. ii. shows in one passage (74.3), or sceolon.

127.20. habbað, MS., Latin 'desunt.'

128.4. These points are Junius's.

129.9. folc, see note on 361.25.

131.1. The scy may be late.

131.14. ðyslicum, MS. v.l., Latin 'stulto labore.'

135.1. suele, MS.

135.11. The second hira may be read hi na, as in C. i.

135.16. The reading æfter strætum, without any article, seems most idiomatic; compare 'boden æfter burgum' (Elene, 972), 'bed æfter burum.' (Beow. 140), &c.

135.18. wiliniað, MS.

136.19. eorum, MS.

137.6. gif he næfð ða are ðe he on beon mæge. This sentence is utterly unintelligible to me. The original has 'si hunc (doctrinæ sermonem) apud ejus animum manus misericordiæ non commendat.'

137.16. The seemingly incorrect eom of C. i. is omitted in H.; there is no 'sum' in the Latin.

137.23. self, MS.

140.20. agne, MS. v. l.

141.3. geornfullice. With this use of an adverb instead of an adjective with the verb substantive, compare M.H.G. 'mir ist leide,' 'daz ir vil werlîchen sît,' &c. and the Modern E. 'I am well.'

141.7. gescitðed, MS.

143.2. dierne, diernes, MSS.

145.12. æeah omitted in C. i. v. l.

149.6. agita. Compare forgetend, 'obliterans,' quoted by Junius from Gl. Cott. and 'pær læg secg mænig garum ageted' (Brunanb. 18). The force of the word lies in the prefix, as is proved by the O.H.G. argezan, 'abolere, postponere, oblivisci,' compared with bigezan, 'adipisci.' The root is gha(n)d, seen in the Latin pre-hendo; hence the word agita means 'thrower-away,' which is also the original signification of forgetan in its various applications.

149.12. rempende. This word only occurs here; it is evidently connected with the O.H.G. rimphan and the Modern G. rümpfen, although the connection of the meanings is not very obvious, the German words being only used in the sense of the corresponding English rumple. Mr. Skeat compares the E. rampant, rampageous, romp, and the Italian rampa, 'claw,' rampare, 'to claw,' which seem to preserve the original meaning of the root.

153.22. hearga, MS.; the word is generally masculine.

155.10. utanne, MS.

155.17. scenicendan, MS. Compare semegan (Vesp. Ps. cxviii. 192) and the Icelandic slakkagile for slakkagile in the Reykholtsmáldagi.

Gíslason, in his 'Frumparti Íslenskrar Túngi í Fornöld,' has collected several instances of sc for s, but considers the c as a purely orthographic variety of s, which view he supports by such spellings as haraldc, landc for haralds, lands. Gíslason supposes that this c is the Greek sigma, and that the usage arose from the habit of writing the name Jesus in Greek letters. This is probably correct as far as it goes, but there seems no reason for extending it to all the cases, especially those where the s is already written in the usual manner. Compare also the forms iacincta (83.24) and Corintheum (211.1) for iacinta and Corinthum.

158.19. scyl drum, MS.; but no v.l. given: there is no corresponding passage in the Latin.

163.12. ceastre, a mistranslation of 'castra,' which is freely, but more correctly rendered by gefylcio above (161.6); fyrðwic would be the literal translation of 'castra.'

163.17. surhðyrelað, MS.

167.1. ungewealdes ofslieð, MS.

167.7. arfesðes, MS. *

168.16. manoda, MS. v.l.

171.11. anbestungne, MS.; see Introduction, pp. xxxii, xxxviii.

172.19. oðre, MS. v.l.

173.20. The archaic gerað has been ingeniously made into gegaderode by some late hand. The word occurs again in a very similar passage (363.15), 'sume yfele menn swa gerade beoð ðæt hie ne magon godum monnum derian.' Compare an analogous alteration in the Parker MS. of the Chronicle (18.15), where the gefor of the original is made into (ge)forþferde. Mr. Earle has in his edition carefully indicated all such late manipulation; most editors incorporate them into their text without comment.

175.9. son, song, MS.

179.3. ealnu weg, MS., pointing to an original ealna weg, the a being labialized by the following w.

180.14. This gingran may be plural; see Introduction, p. xxxvii.

189.21. bisene—æt. Here æt appears as a relative pronoun after a feminine substantive. Compare 9.15, 'heht him swelera ma brengan bi ðære bisene, ðæt he his bicepum sendan meahte,' where æt stands for a plural relative. The same tendency to extend the use of the neuter singular over other genders and the plural is shown in 121.18, 'ðeawas & ðeodscipe to læranne; & ða he ðæt hæfde—,' where ðæt refers to two masculine substantives.

191.18. gewyrhtu, MS.

192.25. slapan, MS. v. l.

193.21. wreccan, compare ærendwrecum (3.6).

195.3. ða, MS.

196.23. ðeawas, MS. v. l.; see Introduction, p. xxv.

197.21. bestæl hine — a genuinely Alfredian word; compare Chronicle (78.12), 'and hie þa under þam hie nihtes bestælon þære fierde se gehorsoda here into Escancestre.'

198.17. forcofedne, MS.; C. ii. has forceorfedne.

201.4. to him Arone. This is a solitary instance of the common Icelandic idiom of placing a proper name in opposition to the pronoun of the third person in the plural (which, of course, stands for the dual); thus, 'þeir Kari' is equivalent to 'hann ok Kari,' 'þeim Sigmundi' to 'honum ok Sigmundi.' This usage has hitherto only been found in O.E. with the duals wit and git; 'wit Seilling' = 'I and Seilling' is the standard example. Junius's MS. reads 'him & Arone,' but it is not impossible that the & is an interpolation of Junius himself.

203.7. sarvisan, the r is indistinct.

207.18. The connection of this and the following lines with the original is very vague: the Latin has, 'Gavisus sum in Domino vehementer, quoniam tandem aliquando refluoruitis pro me sentire sicut et sentiebatis; occupati enim eratis, ut et illorum culpas,' &c.

211.1. Corintheum, compare iacincta, 83.24, and the Icelandic minsta, minstu, for minnsta and minnstu (Gíslason, Frumpartí, p. 85).

213.4. ðesalonicensa in one word is no doubt the true reading: the omission of the relative in such sentences of naming is common in O.E. (see March, A.S. Grammar, p. 180), as also in M.H.G., 'sîn pflege ein künec hiez Anfortas,' 'erbûwens lands hiez Ascalûn,' both examples from Wolfram's Parzivâl.

213.22. Erasure before ðrycte, e still legible.

215.19. his, MS.

215.23. Only one for ðæm in C. i. v. l.

217.7. foresewen, MS.

217.24. beorht, MS.

219.13. Leaf cut out of MS.

220.5. urra selfra, compare 63.1.

220.10. ieldcað, MS.; C. ii. has ildcað.

225.13. Three words omitted in H.

227 8. sorig, MS.

229.4. ðæm (v. l.), ðæs, MSS. Both readings are admissible, but that of H. is the more forcible, if we take the ðæs in the sense of adeo, as in Cynewulf's 'Seafarer' (l. 39, Grein), 'forðon nis ðæs mod-wlanc mon ofer eorðan—ðæt he a his sæfore sorge næbbe.'

229.20. plion, see 37.7.

230.17. ge . . . , MS.

233.11. licittan, MS.

235.22. unsceadfulnesse, MS.

240.7. se holh, MS., but no v. l.

246.5. manian, MS.

247.21. æt cuman. This is one out of many instances which seem to show that the Gothic distinction between gaggan du and kiviman at (Grimm, Gr. iv. 776) once existed in O.E. Compare 59.10 and 132.2 (where one MS. has æt, the other on).

255.23. witteah, MS.; see Introduction, p. xxxii.

257.25. The Latin has 'scriptum.'

260.2. stenge, MS. v. l. The Latin has 'virtutem.'

261.16. ðyrstte, MS.

263.9. ðæt, MS.

265.25. mon, ðu, MSS. The Latin has 'contuderis.'

267.20. seol[u]fre. Here, as at 269.4 and 368.6.20, the u of the derivative syllable is archaically preserved, as in Gothic silubr.

269.22. eft, the e is indistinct; perhaps it would be safer to read oft, as in C.

271.8. gespræcan, MS.

271.19. orsorgtran, MS.

273.22. gehweled, Latin 'putredo quæ interius fervet.' The word seems to occur in this place only.

275.23. gehalé, it is quite uncertain whether the accent belongs to the a or the e.

276.25. to ieðre, MS. v. l.

277.14. ſcette ne, MS.

277.15. ð, MS. This ond for on seems to be caused by the confusion between n and nd, treated of in the Introduction. This confusion was so strongly developed in the Old Anglian dialect as to make any other explanation of the and for on or an in such passages as 'hæfdon gleam and dream and heora ordfruman' (Cædm. 13) superfluous. It is, of course, uncertain in all cases whether the and belonged to the original text, or was introduced by the Southern copyist; perhaps the latter supposition is most probable: after having to change scepen, &c. into scippend several times, the scribe would mechanically substitute and for an without always regarding the sense of the passage.

279.8. ymb[s]p[ri]cd, MS.

285.1. hefug. This u is probably due to assimilation, the original form being hefigu, then hefugu, and finally hefug; compare micul, feminine singular (405.21) and the regular Icelandic feminine singular and neuter plural gomul for gamalu. Such assimilations are rare in O.E., while in O.H.G. they are developed to an often monotonous extent, scōnara for scōnora, spīhiri for spīhari, hungorogon for hun-garogon (Heyne, Laut- und Flexionslehre, p. 30).

285.12. bedecige. This word, which occurs only here, was overlooked by Junius when he indexed the Pastoral, because his MS. wrote it in two words, bede cige (perhaps Junius himself divided it so), and he assumed bede to be a substantive answering to the German bitte, and cige the verb 'to call.' I do not doubt, however, that we have in bedecian a simple derivative of biddan, which is itself used to express the idea of 'begging' a few lines above, where the words of Solomon are first quoted. Such a derivate exists in the Gothic bidagwa, 'beggar.' A weak verb bidagwōn would answer to an O.E. bedegian, and this with the common change of g into c (sucan for sugan, &c.) gives bedecian. This bedegian is no doubt the original of our 'beg,' whose etymology has always been a subject of dispute; the syllable deg was probably contracted into gg before the softening of g took place—possibly during the eleventh century—the stages being bedegian, beggian, beggen, beg.

289.12. hierre, MS.

291.13. sēs, MS. Perhaps the contraction ought to be expanded

sanctes, with the English inflection, but the genitive Paulus, which follows immediately after, makes the form sanctus more probable. Latin names are declined very irregularly in O.E.; observe the datives Timotheo, Tite, below, and the accusatives Timotheus, Titum. The other MS. has the more native forms sancte Paules, of which the former calls for some remark. It is the direct descendant of the Latin genitive sancti, which was introduced into English by the missionaries with shortened i, sancti, at a period when English still retained inflexional and derivative i (anhendi, geri, gifest, &c. in the glossary of Epinal), and this i was, like all other unaccented i's, afterwards weakened to e. In the Martyrology fragment the same form sancte represents the feminine singular sanctæ, and in 443.18, below, it is the English dative singular.

293.4 ortgeard. This word, which is the Gothic aurti-gards, appears also with consonantal assimilation in the form oregeard (381.14). From this oregeard the English orchard is derived, with some modification of meaning, ortgeard being applied to any enclosure for cultivating plants or trees, except corn-fields, while orchard is restricted to the signification of the O.E. æppeltun (381.16). In the passage of the Song of Solomon (381.14.16) 'hortis' is translated by ortgeard and æppeltun indifferently, showing that the ideas of 'plant-enclosure' and 'fruit-tree-enclosure' were convertible, if not identical. It is very improbable that our ancestors, living as they did in the midst of wild trees and flowers, had any conception of a Roman 'hortus'; their gardens were merely enclosures for growing herbs and fruit-trees. The characteristic of a garden as distinguished from a corn-field was that it was enclosed with a wall or hedge; hence in German and Danish the idea of garden is expressed simply by words signifying 'enclosure,' Germ. garten and Danish have, in which the v stands for an older g (compare lov=Icel. log), consequently have=Engl. hedge. In the Dutch tuin (=E. town) the idea of enclosure is also kept up.

293.13. hio, the o over an erased e, still partially legible.

293.19. grete, second e over erasure.

293.19. griellan, Latin 'insequuntur.' This word seems to be a hapax legómenon. It is evidently connected with M. H. G. grelle, 'spike,' 'fork,' and Mod. G. groll. Mr. Skeat compares the Mod. E. grylle, 'sharp' (Halliwell), and adds the following interesting illustration :—‘ In Trinity Coll. Library, Camb. are a lot of bookcases given by a Mr. Grylls. Above the name is conspicuous the crest—a hedgehog—obviously because of his prickles.’

295.4. eac omitted in MS.

295.6. Nabab, MS., the second b made into l by erasure.

295.7. lið gescired, Latin ‘digesto vino.’

295.10. him omitted in MS.

295.15. Æfnere. Observe how the foreign Abner is naturalized : a becomes æ, b becomes f, as in næfre for næbre, and a final e is added to make the word look like a derivate in -ere, Gothic -areis.

295.21. There is no other example of such a word as oferbugan. It is probable that the original had to ferbuganne, out of which the scribe made to oferb. by dittography. Compare C. ii.’s reading of ofersiuwenlic for the forseuwenlic of the two other MSS. (208.11).

297.1. kycglum, Latin ‘verborum jacula,’ is the German kugel; it seems only to occur here.

297.8. pynge, another hâpax legômenon; it is, of course, the Latin pungō.

297.11. suelc, MS.; compare 135.1.

298.1. manian, MS.; compare 246.5.

299.16. wyrðmynðu, MS.

299.19. Essaim, MS.

300.11. & upahæfen, MS., no v.l.

300.20. Here begins what Junius calls a ‘foeda lacuna,’ extending to 310.2.

301.25. onderfōð, MS.

303.10. straciad, MS.

303.11. hanða, MS., stroke of ð erased.

304.9. ob, hie, wolce, MS.

305.1. hine ne, MS.

305.13. ne over erasure.

305.14. t]ruwien, the en over erasure; ſonne hi n—over erasure.

306.15. Some word seems to be omitted between ſara and monna, probably dysigra, answering to the Latin ‘stultorum.’

307.15. orgellie, Latin ‘qua conscientia dedignatur homo.’

309.1. wrænnesse, MS., the se erased.

309.6. Ladzarus, MS.

309.8. dæg, MS.

- 309.10. tunga, n added above the line, which may be contemporary.
- 309.11. Ƿære is probably dativus commodi, referring to tungan.
- 309.15. anga, Latin 'aculei'; compare Gloss. Ep. 43, 'aquilium' anga and a passage from one of Cynewulf's riddles (24.4, Grein), 'me of bosme fareð ætren onga' (said of the 'boga').
- 310.4. gewitene, MS. v.l.; Latin 'gulæ deditos.'
- 310.16. cwæðe, MS. v.l.
- 311.6. Ƿa burg æt Hierusalem. This use of æt is a genuine Teutonic idiom: compare the M. H. G. 'diu bure was ze Santen genant' (Nib. 20.4) and the Icelandic 'kaupstaðr mikill, er hét í Lundi' (Eigla).
- 311.15. ungeðylðe, MS.
- 312.7. forlæten, MS., but no v.l.
- 312.17. ofðor, MS. v.l.; compare gehæfð (126.14) and the analogous sð for st (Appendix I).
- 313.2. eowæð, MS.; compare infinitive eowan (118.7).
- 314.7. ungeðafenlice, MS.
- 315.10. micellre, MS.; compare gestillde (183.25).
- 318.9. etendam, MS., no v.l.
- 319.13. wilniad, MS.
- 320.19. sceal don, MS., no v.l.
- 322.12. dale, MS. v.l.
- 323.10. rummodnessa, plural: compare the O.H.G. and M.H.G. use of abstract substantives in the plural, mit êron, mit sælden, ze hulden (Grimm, Gr. iv. 288). The a may however be a singular inflection, as in C. ii. 194.1, for his suuogornnessa, and in feminines in -unga.
- 323.13. lofes, lifes, MSS., Latin 'laudem.'
- 323.20. Ƿinne, Ƿine, MSS., Latin 'fratres tuos.'
- 324.12. genyhtsunnesse, MS., no v.l.
- 326.4. unrihtwisum, MS. v.l.
- 327.16. Here pening is used in the plural to signify money generally, as is still the case in Swedish and Danish—'have penge (Swedish hafva penningar) hos sig.' Compare 391.27.
- 330.4. hwīðer, MS.
- 331.3. Ƿon, MS.
- 331.5. á, ac, MSS., Latin 'semper.'
- 333.5. ie icenn, MS. Are we to read ieicenn in one word, and assume a weakening of ge into ie? The Modern E. i- for ge- is found in the Cottonian MS. of Dial. Greg., a MS. of the tenth century.

335.13. te, MS. with an o written over the e.

336.11. ofersceadoð, MS.

336.13. sceade, MS., no v.l.

339.12. Iohannes, the e altered from an i.

340.4. unsætð, MS., no v.l.

343.8. bring, MS.

343.24. fæten, MS.

345.3. coom, MS.

345.20. cunnan, MS.

347.5. tympano, MS.; compare Phariseo (361.25).

347.20. gearnoð, MS.

349.17. ðæt, compare 189.21. Note also the use of fōr, as in the Danish 'for meget,' 'altfor stor,' to express excess, instead of to, E. too. As far as I know, this is a solitary instance.

350.21. ðearwas, MS. v.l.

351.2. Here habbað with the participial preterite does not express any idea of time, but = 'keep (hold of).'

351.8. lifes omitted in MS.

351.13. ðurhwiniendan, MS.

351.15. ðonn, MS.

351.25. eccean, MS.

353.1. Compare 359.24, 'ne eft ðæm deofle nan cræft (ne bið) leoftæla ðonne hie mon slite.'

353.14. ðæt elewis, MS.

357.3. monode, MS.

361.13. gemodsumeran, MS.

361.20. hlecað, Latin 'glomerantur.' I do not know the origin of this word, or if it occurs elsewhere.

361.25. The use of folc in this passage is an interesting tradition of the earliest stage of society in which every small body of men was a 'nation,' and as the men of a tribe constituted its army, the ideas of 'nation,' 'crowd,' and 'army' were convertible. Thus in an earlier passage (129.8) folc and here are both used to signify army, 'se here bið eal idel, ðonne he on oðer folc winnan sceal, gif se heretoga dwolað'; compare also 227.24. In the derivate gefylce (161.6) the idea of 'army' is always predominant, as in the Icelandic fylki and fylkir (general). Here itself originally implied nothing more than a crowd, as appears in numerous passages of the Heliand, where heri and folc are used in parallelism, 'bigan thia heri Iudeono, that folc fragoian,' and in the Chronicle 'se here' is always understood of the savage, marauding host of the Danes, as opposed to the native 'fierd.'

363.2. broðor, MS., with an u written over the second o. This sentence is not altogether intelligible, and is certainly a mistranslation; the Latin has 'viri fratres, ego Phariseus sum,' &c.

363.3. Fariscisc, MS.

363.5. antsacodon, MS.; see Introduction, p. xxxi.

363.6. Farisseos, MS.

365.7. maniene, MS.

365.8. C. ii. has the ingenious reading 'ðone ealdan drinc.'

365.10. æt omitted in MS. before isen.

366.14. bearneacan, MS.

367.3. sindon, MS.

367.19. hlige, Latin 'doctrinæ opinionem sibi faciunt'; this hápax legómenon is evidently of the same root as the substantive hlisa (fame).

368.11. oele, see Introduction, p. xxviii. This spelling with oe, pointing to an original ēli, is important, as bearing on the question of the derivation word, for it seems, like the O.H.G. olei (Mod. öl), to show that the Latin oleum is its original. It is, however, remarkable that the Vespasian Psalter, which regularly expresses the ē-uml. with oe, always writes ele, which cannot be derived from the Latin oleum, but must, like the Gothic alēw, have been an indigenous word. I confess myself unable to solve the difficulty.

375.9. herestræt simply means a road for the multitude, without any reference to armies; compare note to 361.25, above. The same remark applies also to the word herberge in German.

375.22. ungemetlicere, MS.

381.2. gemanigfalðod, MS.

385.31. feorwe, the w over erasure. As it stands the word can only be the dative of feorh (life), Gothic fairhwau, but I cannot extract any sense from it. The original has 'aliquando adolescentia juvenus vocatur.' I have, however, just received an explanation from Mr. Skeat, which is no doubt correct. 'The word meant is midfeorh = middle life, midst of life: and then the scribe, having written mid, thinks it to be a prep. and turns feorh into feorwe.'

387.13. gehydnes. This word only occurs here, and is explained by Junius as 'deversorium.' The Latin words answering to the whole sentence are 'subsidia itineris'; gehydnes and getæsu are probably synonyms, like ðegnas ond ðeowas = 'servi' (15.6): gehydnes can hardly therefore have the concrete sense of 'inn,' which would be quite out of place. I believe gehydnes stands for gehygdnes, and comes from the root of hyge, hyht, &c., which often develops the meaning 'pleasure,' 'comfort,' out of that of 'hope': gehydnes is therefore practically identical in meaning with getæsu, and signifies 'comfort.' The lexicographical history of this word, and of innumerable others, proves that the material of our dictionaries is stolen, directly or indirectly, from Junius, without acknowledgment or revision.

391.7. geandsworæð, MS.

391.29. tō te, MS.

393.4. þeng, MS. The same form occurs in the Charter.

393.26. ægðer oðrum. Observe throughout this chapter the use of the neuter to include a masculine and feminine subject. This common Teutonic idiom is not strongly marked in O.E., because of the want of inflection. In Icelandic it is rigorously observed up to the present day; thus, in the poem of the Fisherman and the Flounder all pronouns and adjectives referring to the man and the fish together are in the neuter—'þau stríddu hvort við annars mátt,' because the flounder (flyðra) is feminine.

393.30. hiofen, apparently a hitherto unrecorded strong verb. Compare Gothic and O.H.G. hiufan.

397.4. ne ne, MS.

399.15. medemestan, the first e originally an i.

401.21. ðære, MS.; compare C. ii. 176.21.

405.1. dela, Latin 'mammæ pubertatis.' This word was overlooked by Junius: he probably confounded it with dæla, although æ is never written e in the Pastoral, except perhaps in one or two doubtful cases. It does not occur elsewhere, and, of course, does not appear in Lye or any later work. It is the O.H.G. tila, tili feminine, 'uber,' 'papilla,' which postulate an O.E. nominative delu, and belongs to the same root as mildceondra, 'lactantium' (Vespasian Psalms, 8.2).

405.4. wæstmas ðara dela again translates 'mammæ pubertatis.'

405.19. gesynnigæð, MS.

405.21. micul, MS., see note on 285.1.

407.34. geheatðæð, MS.

409.9. ðæt, compare ðritiges (385.15).

409.33. ðæ, MS.

411.4. ongietad, MS.

411.27. carbunculis, MS., u written over the i.

413.24. be ȝem inked over by a late hand ; I have changed ȝem to ȝæm.

415.6. wuton, MS., with archaic retention of the original w.

419.2. heortaa, MS.

419.27. sylian, which only occurs here, is, together with sol, of the same root as the Latin sordes. Compare O. H. G. kisolotin, 'lota in volutabro,' a gloss on this very passage.

419.33. fætað, an obscure word, evidently connected with German vazzen, vaz, O. E. fæt, &c. The nearest in form is the Icelandic fæta, used in such phrases as 'eiga um vandræða at fæta' (grapple with), 'trautt megu menn um hann fæta' (manage him). For other examples see the Oxford Dictionary, s. v. The whole group of words belongs to the root pad, used in a transitive sense.

421.5. hefigran, see Introduction, p. xxxvii.

421.10. eftga, imperative of eftgian, of which the subjunctive eftgige occurs in the next line. Junius has incorrectly given the infinitive as eftgan, which Bosworth writes eftgán, evidently regarding the word as composed of eft and the verb gan ; Ettmüller, accordingly, refers under eft to eftgangan, without however giving anything under gangan. This is a common trick of his ; he refers in the same way under onga to anga, and omits anga altogether.

423.4. ȝorhtioð, compare ȝorhuvuniað (Vespasian Psalms, 5.6) and þorgifect, þorh in the Epinal Glossary.

423.5. wisdom, the first three letters are surmounted by points, showing that they were to be erased.

• 423.15. funde = 'devised,' compare Chronicle, 104.3, 'and se cyng hæfde funden þæt him (the pirates) mon sæt wið—þæt hie ne dorston þæt land nower gesecan on þa healfe.'

429.3. e erased after the first c of foreðonclice.

431.16. wundedod, MS., with n (late ?) written over the last d.

431.25. wacað seems to have been originally wæcað, the e having been erased.

435.21. setelum, MS.

435.22. geleornað, Latin 'ex deliberatione perpetrari.' leornian and læran had originally a much wider meaning than they have in the modern language, and were often employed without any reference to learning or teaching. Thus, lærdon translates 'predicaverunt' in an earlier passage (429.28), 'hi lærdon hira synna swa swa Sodome dydon, & hi hi nanwuht ne hælon.' The sense of geleornian in the present passage is borne out by a passage of Beowulf (2336, Grein), where leornian occurs in the signification of 'desiring,' 'him ƿæs guðcýning, Wedera þeoden wræce leornode.' Compare also the O. H. G. 'ih lîrnen, uuieo reht tu bist,' where lîrnen has the sense of 'meditate,' which is nearly that of our present geleornað.

437.13. gegaddrode, MS.

437.14. sicerað, of the same root as sīhan, apparently only in this passage.

437.15. hlece, a hápax legómenoð; the h is probably an irregular addition, as in his for is, &c., as the Icelandic verb leka, lak (to dribble), and the adjective lekr, show no initial h.

437.20. gelísian, Latin 'paulatim decidit,' occurs only here. It belongs to the same root as læran, leornian, and lāst.

439.33. welstincenda, Latin 'benevolentia.' The change of meaning of the verb stincan and its derivatives, which, in German and Dutch as well as English, has made it a word of exclusively disagreeable associations, makes it difficult for us to appreciate the fact that it was originally applied to any odour, good or bad, the exact sense being determined by the context. Compare Phoenix, 585 (Grein), 'fægre gefrætwed fugle gelicast in eadwelum æðelum stencum,' and Riddle, 41.23, 'ic eom on stence strengre ðonne recels,' and the M. H. G. 'daz opfer stanch suoze' (Müller, W. B. s. v.).

441.28. onhupað, another hápax legómenon; compare Icelandic hopa undan (retreat).

443.1. unnyt, MS.

443.25. geonre—the Gothic jains, German jener, hitherto unknown in O. E. It is the Scotch yon, whose o is explained by the O. E. diphthong eo.

445.13. gelent. See Mr. Earle's note on this word in his edition of the Chronicle, p. 309.

445.19. Iohannis, MS.; compare 339.12.

447.18. wealg, Latin 'tepidus.' This word was overlooked by Junius, who probably confounded it with the wealg of anwealg (entire), with which it has no connection, anwealg being from the same root as wealwian, Latin volvo, Icelandic sívalr, while the present wealg is the Icelandic volgr, one of the commonest words in the living language, which in Old Icelandic would appear as válgr=still older valgr. Its proper meaning is 'lukewarm,' in which sense it is frequently applied to milk fresh from the cow, but all over Iceland it is said of any hot liquid, such as coffee.

449.9. beforum, MS.

449.24. teladon, MS., another form of tílodon.

457.15. ætgaðdre, MS.

457.16. werpe, MS. This can hardly be anything else but an error for weres, s and p being nearly of the same shape, yet C. ii. has weorpe.

457.16. bewitan, MS.

459.17. cilderu, MS.

459.32. græt, Latin 'cantat,' is not from grætan (weep), but grædan; compare Riddle, 25.3, 'hwilum (ic) græde swa gos.'

461.16. hudenige, Latin 'excutiant,' occurs only here. I am unable to suggest any derivation, unless the word be of the same root as the Latin quatio, which the lautverschiebung would certainly allow. Mr. Skeat compares the Scotch hound, 'to shake.'

463.6. te indistinct, may be to.

463.13. The first half of this line has been partly worn away in the MS., and then inked over by a later hand.

463.22. geniððrad, MS.

465.32. unmehita inked over by a later hand.

THE OLD-ENGLISH Ð.

THE following remarks are an enlargement of a paper read by me before the Philological Society in 1869. As that paper may not be accessible to all who possess this work, and as many of the views advanced in it have since received additional confirmation and illustration, no apology can be needed for introducing here a brief summary of the arguments bearing on the important question of the origin and pronunciation of the thorn-letters and the allied consonants of the labial and guttural series.

To avoid ambiguity I shall, in treating of sounds, as distinguished from their symbols, use Mr. Ellis's palæotype, enclosing, as he has done, palæotypic letters and words in parentheses. In palæotype : (th) as in 'thin,' (dh) as in 'that,' (kh) as Romaic χ, (gh) as Romaic γ, (ɦ) as in 'has,' (dɦ) as in Sanskrit 'dhanu' (true aspirate); the other consonants as in English.

In the oldest Teutonic language, Gothic, the thorn is uniformly represented by one simple character, taken from the old Runic alphabet. This fact, taken in connection with the remarkable accuracy of Ulfilas's alphabet, makes it probable that the sound was also simple and uniform : either (th) or (dh). A strong argument in favour of the latter pronunciation is afforded by the frequent and, in many cases, apparently arbitrary change between this þ and ð in the middle and at the end of words. When we find baup and baud constantly varying, it is difficult to believe that the voiced ð would at once change to a voiceless þ, or vice versa.

In Old High German we find the Gothic thorn generally represented by a ð, which has continued in use up to the present day. In some of the oldest documents which verge towards Low German the combination ðh is written for ð in all positions, initial, medial and final. Finally, in the majority of the Old English MSS. the letter Ȱ, an evident modification of d, is used in all positions. We thus arrive at the result that the thorn was originally uniformly vocal (dh). A serious objection may, however, be brought against the original voiced pronunciation, grounded on the connection of the Teutonic languages with the Old Aryan languages in general, where the thorn is represented by a (t). It cannot be denied that the direct conversion of a voiceless stopped consonant into a vocal unstopped is phonetically improbable, or even impossible; but there is an intermediate stage possible, which removes all difficulties. In Modern Danish and Icelandic all medial and final d's, when uncompounded with other consonants, are pronounced (dh), whatever their origin may be, and the same change has taken place in English, though only to a partial extent, as shown in such words as father, hither, thither, (O. E. fæder, hwider, þider). To this may be added that in Modern Greek the letter delta is pronounced (dh) in all positions, initial as well as medial and final, so that the sound of (d) is almost unknown in that language. I think these facts are strong enough to justify the assumption of an earlier stage of the Teutonic languages in which the Old Aryan (t) was changed into (d), whence the later (dh) arose from imperfect stopping, as in Modern Greek :

Old Aryan	t	d	dh
Oldest Teutonic	d	t	dh
Oldest Low German	dh	t	d
Oldest High German	d	th	d, t

The d therefore, in those Gothic words which fluctuate between d and þ, is to be considered as the original sound. The same d appears in many words, in O. E. as well as Gothic, invariably, instead of the normal þ or ð :

In dd, arising generally out of original dj, as in þrida for þridja.

Lastly, in many isolated words, such as fæder, modor, contrasting with broðor.

This is not the place to enter into a minute enquiry as to the causes of this remarkable variation; it seems certain that, although some rules can be laid down, many of the cases do not follow any definite principle, as is plainly seen in the last three words quoted.

These irregularities only occur in the middle and at the end of words. It seems therefore probable that the change began initially, and was afterwards carried out less perfectly medially and finally.

The later modifications of original (dh) all reduce themselves to :

- 1] change from voice to breath, (dh) becoming (th) ;
- 2] conversion of (dh) or (th) into a stop, giving (d) or (t).

Before proceeding to more minute details, it will be advisable to add a few remarks on the phonetic character of the changes.

The oldest changes of (t) into (d) and (d) into (t) must have occurred simultaneously, otherwise the original (t) and (d) would have merged into one sound, either (t) or (d), without the possibility of an after restoration of the original distinction. The phenomenon is in fact, a case of simple confusion or interchange, as familiarly exemplified in the vulgar hair for air and 'are for hare, when heard, as is not unfrequently the case, from the same mouth. It is important to observe that such changes are quite independent of general phonetic laws, and, as in the present case, as often directly opposed to them : for, if the change from (t) to (d) be a weakening, the other from (d) to (t) must be a strengthening, and therefore opposed to the general tendency of sounds ; and vice versa.

The other changes are of the ordinary phonetic character : they result from relaxation of articulative energy, modified by assimilative tendencies. Of all articulations the 'stopped' consonants require the greatest exertion : the slightest relaxation of the formative action allows the breath to escape, producing various articulations, which may be conveniently included under the common term 'unstopped.' Such was certainly the origin of the Romic (dh), and probably of the Teutonic thorn also. The later change of (dh) to (th) is from voice to breath, and as such will no doubt be pronounced by all philologists contrary to the general law of progressive weakening. It is true that (th) has a sharper and harder sound than (dh), and that the distinction of 'hard' and 'soft' is so far correct, but if we examine the formation of the sounds, the case is exactly reversed. The action of the tongue is identical in both sounds, but in the formation of (dh), besides the position of the tongue which forms the (th), there is the additional exertion of bringing the vocal chords together, which of course diminishes the force of the breath in the mouth. It is evident, therefore, that diminished acoustic effect is quite compatible with increased energy of organic formation.

This law is, however, liable to considerable modification by assimilation, or the tendency to save trouble by continuing a given formative position unchanged, or with as little change as possible. Assimilation, although due to the same relaxative tendencies as the special phonetic laws, yet, like the tendency to interchange, often runs counter to them. Thus, the change of (kj) to (kk) in O. E. wrecca for wrakja, if considered as a change from j to k, would seem contrary to all analogy, while, from an assimilative point of view, it is perfectly natural.

It is this assimilative influence which explains the retention of (dh) or its substitute (d) medially, whilst devocalization is allowed to take place in the unprotected initial and final positions.

In most of the Scandinavian languages, in Dutch and in German, the thorn appears as a stopped consonant. At first sight we are tempted to assume retention of an older pronunciation, at least in the case of Dutch and German, where the ð appears in the earliest documents, but the non-occurrence of an analogous b for the actual v or f makes it almost certain that the ð in Dutch and German, like the corresponding stop of the Scandinavian languages, has arisen from an earlier (dh).

This change from unstopped to stopped is highly anomalous, and can only be paralleled by the Italian and Old French change of Latin j into a stopped consonant, and the similar phenomenon in Old Greek, which are equally opposed to the general tendency of phonetic changes.

We now come to Old English, where we find the original (dh) expressed by three symbols : þ, th and ð. All the oldest MSS. use one of these signs, generally confining themselves to that one, and when they vary, seeming to do so entirely at random. The later (post-Alfredic) MSS. use both þ and ð, often rather loosely, but generally with a certain regularity. This points to the conclusion that the two pronunciations which we are accustomed to associate with þ and ð (chiefly from the Modern Icelandic rules so prominently brought forward by Rask) were of later origin; that all the three symbols originally denoted the same sound, that is to say (dh).

The first books known in England were Latin books. The first books written in England, whether Latin or English, were written exclusively with Latin letters. The sound (dh) not being provided with any distinct symbol in the Latin alphabet, the approximate digraph th was adopted, which certainly then indicated in Latin some breath sound, probably (th). It was probably the feeling of the inaccuracy and clumsiness of using such a combination to express a voiced and simple consonant that led to its rejection. Two courses were now open: to adopt the old Runic letter, in the same way as the wen was made to supersede the clumsy and ambiguous uu, or invent a new sign, to dispense with the necessity of introducing a Runic letter. As we see, both courses were adopted: some chose one letter, some the other; all were unanimous in rejecting the th. Afterwards, when the two sounds (dh) and (th) had become fixed and recognized, the two letters were utilized to express the distinction. It is easy to see why this system was not carried out very strictly in practice: orthography is but a means to an end, and the requirements of intelligibility often fall far short of those of an accurate phonetic notation. Nevertheless, the history of the thorn in O. E. shows a high standard of perfection both in the appreciation and symbolization of sounds, contrasting favourably with the barbarous eccentricities of our present orthography—as shown not least of all in the present subject of investigation.

The Runic inscriptions, of course, use the p exclusively. The question therefore arises, what is the origin of this p? I think there can be little doubt that Mr. Vigfússon's theory is correct: he considers the p to be the Latin D with the stem prolonged both ways. He further thinks that the Runic sign for d was made by joining two of these D's back to back. This, if correct, shows that when the alphabet was first introduced among the Germanic tribes, the (dh) was still in its original stage of (d), the sign being preserved after the sound had changed, just as the modern Greeks keep their δ = (dh) unchanged. Double D = (d) suggests the theory that the original aspirate had at that time by assimilation been changed to (dd)—a long or 'held' (d), which would afterwards be reduced to simple (d).

Aryan	d	t	dh
Oldest Teutonic	t	d (p)	dd (pα)
Later Teutonic	t	dh (p)	d (pα)

All the MSS. of Alfred's time belong to the older class. They show that in his time the sound (th) was not recognized, and, therefore, that the constant use of þ in the two Pastoral MSS. is a genuine indication of the pronunciation. Other MSS. of Alfred's period employ the p with equal exclusiveness. A good example is the Parker MS. of the Chronicle, certainly one of the most archaic MSS. that can, with any certainty, be attributed to Alfred's reign. The Lauderdale Orosius, which is probably rather later than the Pastoral MSS., shows both p and þ, but the p's greatly predominate. It must also be noted that isolated p's occur in the Pastoral MSS. and þ's in the Parker Chronicle, showing that the scribes were acquainted with both þ and ð.

The more accurate of the later MSS. generally write þ initially and ð medially. Exceptions to this general rule arise from peculiarities of the MS. word-division, which frequently differs from that of our printed texts. Thus, if the word 'broðor' comes at the end of a line, so that there is only room for the first three letters, the 'ðor' which begins the next line is written with a þ. The same is the case when a word in the middle of a line is, from motives of calligraphical elegance or convenience, divided into two groups of letters, 'bro ðor' again becoming 'bro þor.' If, on the contrary, two words are written in one group, so that the initial þ of the second becomes orthographically medial, the þ is changed into ð: 'for þam þe' becomes 'forðamðe,' 'wið þone' becomes 'wiððone,' &c. This is the explanation of the frequent writing of pronominal thorn-words with ð, which in an earlier paper I erroneously considered an argument in favour of my theory. It was not till I had carefully examined the Bodleian MS. of Elfric's Homilies that I discovered the real MS. usage. The assumption of a (dh) sound of these pronominal words in O. E. must, therefore, rest on other grounds. It need scarcely be remarked that such niceties as writing 'spricþ' for 'spricð' are as much beyond the capacity of the old scribes as they seem to be of modern critical editors, who do not stop to consider whether their 'normalized' spricð, þiræcð (-skdh), &c. are phonetically possible or not. It is evident that the scribes mechanically followed an orthographic tradition without exercising any independent judgment of their own: the systematic utilization of the two letters begun by some Þóroddr of the period was found of little practical importance for purely literary purposes, and therefore, like the use of accents, degenerated into an unmeaning piece of calligraphy.

We can now safely assume three stages in the history of the thorn in English:

Early Old English	initial dh,	medial dh,	final dh
Late Old English	- „	th (dh)	„ dh „ dh
Middle and Modern English	„	th (dh)	„ dh „ th

The mystery of the pronunciation of the, thou, &c. is now solved: these words are simply archaisms, remnants of an older stage of pronunciation preserved unchanged by the frequency of their occurrence¹.

It need hardly be remarked that the results of the above investigation apply equally to the corresponding back (guttural) and lip consonants. We can, however, only trace the history of the f in O. E. by the analogy of the thorn. There can be no doubt that the f was originally vocal in all cases, like the Welsh f, as is shown by the German spelling—preserved up to the present day—of wolc, uogal, &c., and the pronunciation of Modern Dutch.

It is probable that the earliest sound of the f was (bh), the purely labial preceding the dento-labial articulation, as in Romaine.

The case of h is somewhat different. The frequent omission of the initial h in the Hatton Pastoral, as in æfde for hæfde, is almost certain evidence that initial h at that period represented the simple expulsion of breath, which, being the weakest of all articulations, is incapable of further degradation, and can only be dropped. If the initial h had the sound of (gh), or even (kh), as has been conjectured, it would no more have been liable to be dropped than (s), (r), or any other consonant. It is evident, therefore, that formative weakening has proceeded farther with this series than with the other two. The explanation must be sought in an important phonetic law: general weakening tendencies attack the strongest articulations first. Accordingly, we find that while original (d) and (b) have only passed through one stage of weakening, original initial (g) has passed through no less than three: (gh), (kh) and (h), in the last reaching the extreme of phonetic decrepitude. Medial and final h seem to have remained parallel with the point and lip series, although it is not improbable, according to the law just stated, that final (gh) may soon have become (kh). Note, however, the spelling bogh for boh or bog (Past. 81.19).

The cases in which d, b and g represent original Aryan t, p and k may be divided into two classes: the first including those cases treated of above, in which the abnormality is invariable, and extends through the whole language; the second, those which appear only as archaisms in the older MSS. In the very oldest MSS. the words which have d, b and g instead of the later ð, f and h are so numerous, that we are almost forced to the conclusion that at a period not much earlier than the beginning of the eighth century, the sounds represented by ð, f and h did not occur anywhere but initially. Thus, in the fragment of Cædmon we find gidanc, heben for the Alfredic geðonc, hefon, in the Epinal glossary sud for swð, loda alternating with lotha, and gibaen for gifen. The cases of g for h are so common in the MSS. of the Pastoral that earlier examples are not necessary: such forms as slog for sloh belong to the most marked characteristics of Alfred's period. There are also a few examples of b for f, as ob for of (304.9), bewæbed for bewæfed (82.8). It is remarkable that no corresponding examples of d for ð occur in the Pastoral. An interesting example of the change of b into f is afforded by one of Cynewulf's riddles, where the word BOGA written backwards appears in the shape of AGOF. The Northumbrian original had correctly AGOB; the scribe, misled by the frequent necessity of altering the Northumbrian preposition ob into of treated the second syllable of the unintelligible word in the same way.

Distinct traces of the final d for ð occur in the verbal termination -t for -ð, which is not unfrequent in the Pastoral; thus, ðyncet for ðyncetð (25.9), dot for doð (61.15). This ðyncet is nothing but ðynced, the original of ðyncetð, with the final d devocalized, as in sint for sind. These forms, which are almost universal in some of the oldest MSS. and are probably the originals of the otherwise inexplicable contractions fint (= findet) for findeð, itt for iteð, &c., are generally rejected as 'errors of the scribe.'

The f and h in the combination ft and ht must be carefully distinguished from the other f's and h's treated of above. They were formed directly from the original Aryan (p) and (k), the following (t) protecting them from the changes which the other (p)'s and (k)'s underwent. The original pt and ct are still preserved in some of the oldest documents, thus the Epinal glossary has scaept for scaeft, nect for niht, the fragment of Cædmon dryctin for *dryhten*¹. The assimilative influence of the t precludes the possibility of an original vocal pronunciation: the change must have been direct from (pt) to (pht) and (ft), from (kt) to (kht).

Analogous to this f and h is a very remarkable ð, which seems to be peculiar to the Old West-Saxon dialect, and appears only in a few MSS. It is in its origin quite distinct from the ordinary ð, and resembles the above-mentioned f and h in being uniformly voiceless. It is a modification of a t, but only in the combination st; thus, tældesð, ciddesð for tældest, ciddest, gæsð for gast. The change is evidently due to the assimilative influence of the preceding s, and might almost be termed consonantal umlaut, the (th) being exactly intermediate to the (t) and the (s), a relation which is distinctly shown in Mr. Bell's speech symbols. The occurrence of this ſ is, as remarked above, limited. It is extremely frequent in H. and very rare in C. and C. ii. Examples in C. are læsſe (8.16) and æwſæstoſe (26.4), in C. ii. unſcristan (212.3) and ytemesſan (244.20). Isolated examples occur in later MSS. of Alfred's works, and the Dialogues of Gregory show several, while in the Chronicle, Charter, and Martyrology, there is not a single one.

Traces of a similar assimilation of f and t appear in gehæfſ (126.14) and ofſcor (312.17) for gehæft and ofſtor.
